Peres Rejects UN Demand to Leave the South

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Shimon Peres rejected on Wednesday a United Nations Sccurity Council resolution calling on Israel to withdraw from Lebanon. The Security council voted 14-0

Tuesday to adopt a resolution calling for an end in southern Lebanon to any military presence which is not accepted by the Lebanese authorities." The United States ab-

Mr. Peres said that UN troops were not sufficient protection for israel's northern border.

"I hope that the Security Council will come to terms with reality." he

Mr. Peres added that he saw a need for the nine-nation, 5,800member UN Interim Force in Lebanon but not for its deployment as far as the Israeli border. Israel maintains about 1,000 troops in southern Lebanon to back up the tiny South Lebanon Army militia, which patrois a narrow buffer zone along the border.

in New York, Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said that the resolution ignored the security needs of Israelis and Lebanese alike. Benjamin Netanyahu, the Israeli ambas-sador to the UN, said that Israel would not comply with it.

But Mr. Peres indicated that Israel wanted the continuation of the force, known as UNIFIL, which has been patrolling southern Lebanon since 1978.

He said that he understood that "if UNIFIL will depart from Lebanon, the chaotic situation will simply be augmented. On the other hand, UNIFIL alone cannot guarantee the peace of Lebanon, neither in Beirut nor in the south."

PARIS - With one week having st since the last terrorist bomb attack, this city is cautiously moving toward a return to normal life following the worst series of assaults in more than 20 years.

President François Mitterrand said Wednesday that he was postponing a much-awaited decision regarding a controversial plan to redraw French election districts because of the crisis atmosphere still prevailing in this country.

But, while extra security measures were abundant and obvious, few events here were being canceled or postponed as Parisians began to entertain the tentative hope that the bombing assaults might be over, at least for some time.

Jobs Rate Improves In OECD

Employment Growth Called 'Modest at Best'

By Axel Krause

nternstional Herald Tribus PARIS - The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development said Wednesday that employment in Western industrialized countries has been growing since the summer of 1985 and that the rate will pick up later this year and continue through 1987. We are by no means heading back to full employment, but the OECD area is turning the corner on jobs," said Ronald Gass, the agency's director for manpower, social affairs and education, referring to its annual employment outlook report released Wednesday. OECD secretariat officials, however, described the rate of growth in jobs as "modest at best" -about I percent a year. They added that the growth rate "may be pick-ing up slightly this year."

Using calculations based on OECD figures, an estimated 375 million people are now employed in the organization's 24 member nations, which include the United States, Canada, European Community members. Nordic countries, Japan and Australia.

Officials said an increase in the number of jobs will help total unemployment throughout member countries stabilize at about 31 miltion, or 8.2 percent of the work force, until the end of 1987. Even so, they said, that figure is the highest since 1983, and is 63 percent, or 12 million, higher than the total unemployed of 19 million in 1979.

OECD said it expected unemployment to continue declining during the second half of this year in the United States, Australia, West Germany and Britain. They predicted the unemployment rate would remain almost unchanged in France and Canada and would rise slightly in Japan and Italy.

Tragic, desperate problems remain, such as high levels of unemployment among youth and those out of a job for a year or more. particularly in Europe" Mr. Gass said. "But employment is going up everywhere, which is a hopeful sign," adding that "it is vital to keep the recovery going." The OECD, based in Paris, is forecasting that gross national product in its member nations will grow 3 percent this year and 3.25 percent in 1987. GNP measures the total value of a nation's goods and services. The employment report said that civilian employment in major West European countries has risen by 1.1 million, or 1.2 percent, since the end of 1982, primarily in Britain and Italy. Employment in Japan rose a seasonally adjusted 1.7 million, or 3 percent, over the same But the biggest gains came in North America, where the number of new jobs jumped by an average 9.8 percent a year, or a total of nearly 10.8 million jobs created, the report said. Most of that gain was in the United States. The agency also warned about what Mr. Gass termed "the perverse" effects of concealed employment, also known as the underground economy. The OECD defines this as work for which a payment, though made, is not reported to governmental authorities; the category excludes crime, household and community activianalysts said Tuesday that pressure was building on the army to attack an Iranian-backed Shiite militia that has been involved in an increasing number of attacks on Israeli UN and Christian militia forces in southern Lebanon.

Military sources confirmed that some "tactical" maneuvers took place Monday, with several hundred Israeli soldiers reinforcing the predominantly Christian militia known as the South Lebanon Army. The militia controls the 3- to 12-mile (5- to 19-kilometer) strip of Lebanese territory that Israel considers a "security zone" along the

Official Defends Jamaican Killings

MIAMI (NYT) - Jamaica's security minister has confirmed that the police in the Caribbean nation have killed an average of 200 civilians yearly for the last seven years, but he has denied the charge that many of the killings amounted to "the regular practice of summary execution." Winston Spaulding, Jamaica's minister of national security and justice. made the statement Tuesday in response to a new report by Americas Watch, a human-rights group based in New York. He denied its assertion that "the Jampican police seek out those they suspect of having engaged

Mr. Spaulding said Jamaica had been troubled for years by warring gangs wearing the colors of the two major political parties, competing drug barons and "left-wing terrorists" trained in Cuba who commit beries, murders and shootings to create fear, insecurity and a great lack of confidence in the government." He said the majority of the victims had been armed criminals cut down in shoot-outs with the police.

Beijing and Moscow Schedule Talks

BELING (Renters) — Chins and the Soviet Union will hold a ninth round of talks on normalizing political relations in Beijing beginning Oct. 6, the Chinese Foreign Ministry said Wednesday.

It will be the first session since the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, gave a speech in Vladivostok in July in which he offered concessions on a nmber of disputes. The talks began in 1979.

Mr. Gorbachev offered to withdraw some troops from Afghanistan and Mongolia and to make concessions over disputed frontier islands. But he made no offers on reducing the Vietnamese military presence in Cambodia, which China considers to be the most important obstacle to

Missionary Dies in Kenya Police Office

NAIROBI (Reuters) - Lyle Marvin Hutson, a U.S. missionary detained last week on security charges, died at the headquarters of Kenya's Criminal Investigation Department Wednesday, security sources said.

Mr. Hutson, who was working with the Associated Christian Churches of Kenya, an evangelical group, collapsed in the waiting room while making his daily visit to the department, they said. He and another American missionary, Richard Scott Hamilton, were detained in the northwest town of Kitale on Friday and released in Nairobi on Sunday on condition that they reported to the police every morning, the sources said. The two U.S. citizens and a third person of unknown nationality are accused of violating Kenya's security by illegally importing powerful radio transmitters and walkie-talkies. President Daniel arap Moi said Tuesday that the government took a serious view of the case and would be extra vigilant to prevent such consignments entering the country.

Candidate Aims to Make Michigan and U.S. History By David S. Broder

Washington Peat Service

DETROIT — "Together," the ads say, as rows of cheering white faces smile approval at the handsome black man on the podium, "we will make Michigan history. We will make American history."

The first ads for William Lucas, who last year switched parties and who last month won a hard-fought battle for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, reach right to the emotional bottom line of this year's Michigan contest. "Some will say I cannot be elected governor,"

Mr. Lucas intones, in an excerpt from his Re-publican convention address, "that the barriers of ignorance and bigotry are still too strong. They do not know the people of Michigan, their wisdom and their fairness."

This appeal to make the former New York City policeman, FBI agent, sheriff and elected county executive the first black governor in the United States since the Reconstruction period after the Civil War is designed, strategists for Mr. Lucas say, both to solidify his support among traditional Republicans in outstate Michigan — to whom he's largely a stranger — and to increase his share of the normally Democratic black vote here in Detroit. It is a plausible strategy, but so far it shows no sign of denting the almost 2-to-1 advantage Governor James J. Blanchard, a Democrat, holds in his battle for re-election. The reason may be that it does not answer

With memployment half what it was at the start of Mr. Blanchard's term four years ago and many business leaders agreeing with his boast that this is "the turnaround state," polls show him cruising comfortably 20 to 30 per-centage points ahead of his challenger. "Michigan elections tend to be close," but he added, "I went into this race with the broadest base of support of any Democrat in modern times. My goal is to carry every county if possible, and certainly every region of the rick, 26, a claims examiner, and his wife, Julie the national economy and auto industry rebounded, he was able to restore funds cut from schools and social programs while reducing tax rates — a hard-to-beat combination.

He has won endorsements from the normally Republican Michigan Farm Bureau and the Retail Federation, and polls show him with a 55-percent approval rating among Republicans and one-third of their votes.

While Mr. Lucas's primary victory captured national headlines, Mr. Blanchard won notice at home by announcing the backing of 250 chief executives, ranging from Ford and Chrysler to small firms in such normally conservative communities as Holland and Frankenmuth.

Mr. Lucas, 58, is a great success story. He was orphaned at 14 in Harlem, studied law at night while on the police force and has seen three of his children become doctors, one a medical student and one a police officer. His basic argument is that Mr. Blanchard's "turnaround" is tissue-thin, that Michigan is

U.S. Now Believes Arthur Walker Headed Spy Ring, While Still in Navy

By Philip Shenon New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has scheduled a new interrogation of Arthur J. Walker, convicted of spying for the Soviet Union, and experts now believe that he, and not his brother, John, may have created the Walker family spy ring, according to Reagan administration officials.

William Lucas

The development follows reports by Justice Department officials that John A. Walker Jr. lied during recent polygraph, or he-detector, examinations about the extent of the spy ring and its origins.
Officials said that information from Arthur Walker would be compared with statements from his brother, a former navy warrant officer who has described himself as the leader of the apy ring. Officials said the new interrogation of Arthur Walker would center on allegations that he began his esplonage activities while in the navy rather than afterward. "If the request is made, it will be made this week," Mr. Willcox said. Further time may be needed to assess all of the respects of the Walker operations."

Arthur Walker, who was convicted last year of stealing classified nts from a military contractor for whom he worked after his retirement, has denied any previous espionage. But officials said that polygraph examinations have determined that he, as well as his brother, was deceptive when questioned about when the spying began.

John Walker's former wife, Bar-

Standing in a crude bamboo shelter in the midst of a coca field, the 30-year-old mother of four said the collapse of the market in Bolivia for coca leaves, the raw material of cocaine, had destroyed her family's finances. Some of the neighbors were thinking of selfing their land, she said, but there were no

The woman's story seemed to reflect the impact throughout the Chapare, Bolivia's primary coca growing region, of the joint operations by American and Bolivian forces to destroy the laboratories that turn the farmers' leaves into cocaine.

With the price of coca leaves forced to rock bottom by the raids and little call for the services of those who pick the leaves and stamp them into paste, which is the first step in processing, many thousands of transient growers and workers have fled the Chapare, esumably for their home areas elsewhere in

A recent trip through the Chapare found few signs of the cars and trucks that those familiar with the area said had clogged its primitive roads until recently.

Cantines sat empty. Roadside food stalls that had once served as neighborhood gathering places had little business. Many were abandoned, just sheets of brightly colored plastic stretched over bamboo frames.

But Americans and Bolivians engaged in anti-drug programs said they thought that, at this point, most of those involved in coca production simply expected to wait until than $20 each. That price is thought to be close contact with the officers in charge and sometimes go out on field patrols. In practice, much of the leverage wicked by those working for the American anti-drig programs comes from the economic aid they provide. The State Department buys gasn-ine for the helicopter and uniforms for the troops, and pays bonuses of $100 a month for the officers and all of the $50-a month salary received by the enlisted men. But that appears small when compared with what the other side offers, according to people in the area, leading to continue doubt and confusion about who is working for what end. An American with one of the anti-drug programs said traffickers were willing to pay any drug police officer $25,000, to be distributed as he found fit, for providing one-time landing rights for a light plane picking up coca paste or cocaine base. The determination of those in the business was demonstrated by a helicopter trip over the coca fields. After four days of overcast weather, which had kept the helicopter out of the air, many growers were drying their leaves on immense sheets spread out on the Along one dirt road, a grower took up half-the width of the road itself to dry his leaves.

The growers did it despite the fact that according to drug experts, dried leaves have to be converted into paste within a week, and paste does not last much longer than that before it must be converted into base.

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican has issued a public rebuke of the approval of Pope John Paul II.

A Vatican official who asked not to be named said the action did not include any punishment. The offi-cial said it was intended as a warning to the faithful that the Vatican had found some of the Father chillebeecker's writings erroneous.

The notification, signed by Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, the head of the congregation, was published on the front page of the Vatican daily newspaper L'Osservatore Romano and broadcast by Vatican radio.

Last month, the Vatican prohibited the Reverend Charles E. Curran from teaching theology at Catholic University of America in Washington because of his liberal views on sexual morality.

The Congregation for the Doc-trine of the Faith said it had issued the notification following an exnation of one of Father Schillebeeckx's books, "A Case for People in the Church. Christian Identity and Offices in the Church."

The Vatican said it took issue with Father Schillebeecks's views on the priestly ministry, specifically his theory that it was possible for someone not ordained as a priest to consecrate the host and celebrate

In an earlier work, Father Schillebeeckx had suggested that communities without priests could se-lect one of their number who could consecrate the Holy Encharist without having been ordained. Father Schillebeeckx teaches at

Reagan's New SDI Offer

Reagan has been barreling down a road of rearmament that could lead in two very different directions. The result could be an open-ended arms race or, because of that threat, an intensive new effort to restrain new military technologies. Now, heading into the final lap of his presidency, Mr. Reagan seems to be earnestly seeking negotiated controls.

In Stockholm, East and West have agreed to gnard against surprise attack by ex-changing more information about military operations. Though not a major accord, it is noteworthy as the first real security agreement since 1979 and one that opens Soviet military forces to significant inspection.

The long, bitter conflict over intermediate-range missiles in Europe also begins to look manageable. Both sides seem ready to acknowledge Euromissiles as superfluous and to accept major reductions. Properly verified treaties to ban the production of chemical weapons and to further limit nuclear testing appear within reach. Most important, Mr. Reagan's account of hitherto private exchanges about controlling strategic weapons begins to suggest the possibility of agreement, at least in principle.

By deploring the SALT accords and committing himself to a "star wars" missile defense, Mr. Reagan had been challenging the major premises of arms control. As long as he treated potential defenses as nonwith a costly new technological competition and making it impossible for them to sign away their right to respond with offensive arms. That stimulated Soviet interest in a new accord, but only one that would govern both offensive and defensive arsenals. And that is what Mr. Reagan seemed to offer Monday. The U.S. proposal he described — five years of research and devel-opment on the Strategic Defense Initiative followed by two years of negotiation about how to share the results - is laden with controversy. He plainly means to renegotieven if the Kremlin agrees, it would probably want more than the six months' notice he offers for canceling restraints.

Still, the recognition that a missile delense can itself be threatening and that stability requires a shared vision of both offensive and defensive deployments has been the essential condition for progress. Mr. Reagan may not have enough time in the White House to compose the details of the next strategic agreement. But he has won the Soviet leader's attention and overridden those in his administration who oppose virtually all negotiated restraints. The broad principles that the president and Mikhail Gorbachev may now be able to proclaim make it important to clear away all obstacles to their meeting again.

Sudan's Starvation War

A kind of conspiracy of silence too often obscures the misdeeds that Africans commit against each other. It seems easier to pick out the offenses of white South Africa. especially in such forums as the current session of the United Nations General Assembly, which the Third World prefers to regard as a place to get the West's ear. Yet in more than one place in black Africa right now, atrocities are being perpetrated on a scale that overwhelms the imagination. In Sudan in particular, political struggle has taken the form of a concerted campaign to deny food to hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of people. Untold numbers are starving, and a huge swath of the country is being brutalized as a deliberate tactic of war.

In Sudan, a seemingly permanent conflict between the country's different sections and religious groups has entered a cruel stage. Neither the Islamic government in the north nor the Christian rebels in the south have entirely clean hands, but the immediate transgressor is plainly the rebels, who are making blatant use of starvation tactics. Last month forces of the Sudan

People's Liberation Army, the rebels' military arm, shot down a government civilian airliner, killing all 60 aboard, to enforce its political demands. Ignoring international appeals, the rebels have kept almost all land relief convoys from reaching the besieged cities to which desperate peasants have fled. The rebels are supported by the Marxist government in Ethiopia, which has used imilar tactics against dissidents of its own.

Few other African states are ready to get involved in the war in Sudan. Yet such is the vulnerability of all of Africa that the whole continent should see its interest in establishing that mass starvation should not be used as a weapon of war. War almost always puts terrible burdens on civilians, but it is bitter and wrong that military forces directly target civilians or take them hostage by holding up their food. In moral terms, starving people who are defenseless and unoffending is no better than shooting them. The principle of civilian noncombatancy desperately needs to be reaffirmed. Interference with civilian relief needs to be seen for what it is: a crime

Boost Trade, Not Dollar

Is the dollar still overvalued? Treasury now would push it into recession. Mr. Baker Secretary James Baker thinks so, pointing says there's a better way: Increase demand to the huge U.S. trade deficit. His European for American exports by stimulating the rparts think not, citing the dollar's 40 percent drop against the German mark and Japanese yen since Febmary 1985. Last weekend, the disagreement turned nasty. Angered by Mr. Baker's attempt to "talk down" the dollar, the Enropean Community vowed to defend its value in the currency markets. The Europeans would win if this were academic debate. At current exchange rates American exports should become fully competitive, eventually. But eventually could be years away; Chrysler Corp., for example, is just gearing up exports to exploit the new rates. Meanwhile, if Europe and Japan want the benefits of stable exchange rates that reflect the relative sing power of national currencies, they need to stimulate their own economies and provide the capital for developing countries to resume growth. A year ago, it was widely assumed that if the dollar dropped 20 to 30 percent, export sales would shoot up, sharply cutting America's trade deficit and reducing pressure for protection against imports. But exports haven't responded yet. The global glut in food and fiber has depressed shipments of American farm products. Sales of heavy machinery are weak because industry worldwide is investing very little.

The standard remedy for trade deficit is austerity. Fiscal and monetary restraint would discourage imports of cars from West Germany and video recorders from Japan. But the U.S. economy is barely growing as it is. To impose such restraints lagging economies of our traditional customers. That's why he has been pressing West Germany and Japan to cut their do mestic interest rates. If these "trade-surplus" economies expand, everyone will be better off. If they don't, the dollar will fall more, making foreign goods even less attractive to the huge U.S. market.

He makes sense as far as he goes. There is some risk that monetary stimulation in Eutope and Japan would kindle inflation. There is a far greater risk that continuing American deficits will lead to a collapse in the open trade so critical to collective prosperity. But Mr. Baker and his counterparts avoid a closely related, equally important issue: exports to developing countries.

Ideally, Japan and Europe would invest much of their $100 billion export surplus in developing countries, which offer high returns on capital. Those countries would recycle much of this money by buying industrial goods in America, thus reducing the trade deficit. They can't do that now because the flow of capital has virtually stopped; private banks are no longer willing to act as creditors to developing countries. It isn't likely to resume until the governments of the industrial economies accept some of the risk of Third World investment. Central bankers detest public quarrels. Within hours of their declaration of defiance, the Europeans were offering soothing clarifications. But trade imbalances remain an ominous threat that will not vield to calm words and token concessions. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Hopes and Hurdles on Arms

After maneuvering for months behind a smoke screen of acrimony, the United States and the Soviet Union have suddenly burst into the clear, each waving what seem to be sensible proposals for major arms limitations. President Reagan, who once talked of tearing up the only treaty that put a ceiling on intercontinental nuclear missiles, proclaimed at the United Nations hope for broader agreements.

But with the hope came hurdles. The president stood by his proposal for extending the 1972 ABM defense treaty for only half as long as the Soviets wanted. And there is the "pall" that Mr. Reagan said has been cast over superpower relations with the arrest of Nicholas Daniloff.

Yet with that hurdle came some small hope. Instead of going on, as he once might have, to call Moscow an evil empire, the president concluded simply, "The world expects better." He declined on the Daniloff case, saying, "Everything's too deli-cate." A Soviet spokesman says there are "several ideas in the air" for removing the pall, all of which may leave Mr. Daniloff with his honor intact. That may seem like a tall order. But then so did movement on arms control just a few months ago.

Pretoria Girds for a Battle Just Beginning

WASHINGTON — The white leaders of Afrikanerdom have given every indication that they are prepared to fight indefinitely for the preservation of minority rule in South Africa. In recent days, there has been a dramatic change in South African rhetoric concerning the purported international foes marshaled against the white-ruled republic.

For years, South African government officials and military strategists held that the Soviet Union was orchestrating a "total onslaught" against them through proxy governments and liberation fronts in southern Africa. But after the recent Senate vote for mandatory sanctions, President P. W. Botha proclaimed that South Africans, of all races, are facing their most serious challenge from the capitalist West rather than the communist East.

Onite apart from being a rather crude attempt to build a xenophobic coalition across racial divisions, the speech was but one example of South Africa's increasing defiance of international pressure and a forewarning of a more militant period ahead.

In contrast to the despair and pes-simism found in South Africa's business community and among some black activists, there is an eerie confidence easily sensed along Pretoria's corridors of power. As South Africa's internal turmoil has mounted over the last several months, Pretoria's military elite has emerged as the dominant force in policy-making. Senior military and intelligence officials are openly threatening an escalation of domestic repression and regional destabilization. At the Nationalist Party Congress in Angust, Magnus Malan, South African defense minister warned: "Those who chant loudest in the chorus for sanctions and condemnation should take note — we have not even started to use our muscle and capabilities."

While just a few months ago some members of Mr. Botha's cabinet, the so-called "verligte" (enlightened) wing of the party, publicly spoke of By Kurt M. Campbell the possibility of sitting down at the In addition, the government institutnegotiating table with the African National Congress, there are now no prominent officials calling for moderation, compromise or accommodation. There are no longer doves in the Nationalist government, only the traditional hawks and the ascendant 'eagles" of the defense forces.

While Mr. Botha continues to try to allay international criticism with the promise of forming a multiracial National Council to "advise" the government on racial matters, the outlines of a desperate strategy to cling to power, no matter the consences, are beginning to take shape. Since the reimposition of the state of emergency in June, the government has itself waged a "total onslaught" against all forms of opposition. Army deployments in the townships have increased, and there is growing support among the military for employing, in the words of one commander. overwhelming force" against the black dissidents.

Pretoria has also moved to forther erode the independent power of the judiciary and stifle critics in the press. ed a number of draconian restrictions for Western correspondents and television networks with the tiltimate objective of hiding South Africa's unfolding civil war from the world.

Mr. Botha has also initiated a wide range of measures designed to insulate South Africa from international sanctions, including the creation of a stockpile of strategic materials.

A troubling side effect of the republic's increasing domestic turnoil has been a much more belligerent regional policy directed against the black-ruled nations to the north. South African commando teams and warplanes have raided each of the front line states in the past year. Protoria has given notice that pressure on its neighbors will increase. In response to calls for sanctions from Zimbabwe and Zambia, states heavily dependent on South Africa for trade and transportation, Mr. Botha has declared economic warfare by levying heavy duties on all goods and resources passing through or from South Africa. In addition, South Africa has beefed up its military force in Namibia and is poised to escalate the brushfire war in Angola.

To prosecute its policy of regional destabilization, South African defense contractors recently unveiled a new attack helicopter and fighter plane, and national service requirements for white South Africans have been increased.

In its rhetoric and retaliations, white South Africa is preparing for the coming conflagration. Responsible government spokesmen speak in almost biblical terms about the final showdown between the forces of good and evil, often recalling Afrikanerdom's greatest triumph at the Battle of Blood River in 1838, when 500 white voortrekkers withstood the repeated attacks of 30 times their number of Zulu warriors. The will and conviction to fight until the very last have a strong hold on the Afrikaner imagination, and the government has exploited this cultural mythology to its advantage. The Nationalist government's view that it would ultimately be better to die than adapt poses the greatest challenge for American foreign policy over the long run.

While the battle for sanctions is being won by those who favor isolating South Africa commercially, the war over who will determine South Africa's destiny has just begun. White South Africa has threatened to use all the power at its disposal -- a highly motivated army, a ruthlessly efficient internal security apparatus and even its nuclear know-how - to preserve Afrikaner hegemony on the southern tip of Africa, or to drag the entire region down trying.

Whether the United States will be able to convince the Nationalist government elite that there is a better way ahead for South Africa will he the ultimate test of American diplo-macy toward that embattled land.

Political Players Set Their Own Rules in Pakistan

By Richard M. Weintraub

T SLAMABAD, Pakistan — "This L country must have democracy; it's the only way it can survive," the Pakistani diplomat said with conviction. It is a proposition the government's most vocal critic. Benazir Bhutto, could endorse, as could Prime Minister Mohammed Khan Junejo, and perhaps even President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

With such accord on the country's needs, why does Pakistan have so much trouble staying on the seemingly agreed political path? Why, four des after independence, is it still struggling to make itself into a coherent whole?

together different ethnic groups and called them a modern state. This argument says that the common denominator of religion — Islam — is not enough to balance the separate demands of Baluchis, Pathans, Sindhis and Punjabis who make up contemporary Pakistan. As proof, there is the example of Bangladesh, the Bengali eastern wing of the original Pakistan that split off to become a separate country in 1971. Yet Pakistan has a more or less rational border, a single army, police, established bureaucracies, state television and radio, newspapers that circulate in much of the country, an evolving economy, national policies for health, education and almost every other subject - most of the attributes of a modern state.

The solution in Pakistan therefore ought to be simple: If you want civilian, democratic government, you hold an election. Some people win and some people lose, and those who win go about governing the country until it is time to do it all over again. It is a proposition that works as long as everyone, or almost everyone, agrees to let it work. The problem is that for most of Pakistan's history the country's political elite has used the rhetoric of democracy, but there has been little agreement on how a democratic system should be established. The result has been prolonged periods of direct martial-law rule or thinly disenised military control.

Pakistan now is at a crossroads. One direction leads toward political life by the power of the military's guns or the mob, and the other toward the more flexible route of estab-One answer is that Pakistan is not lished political give-and-take. The problem is that the players all want to make their own rules for the political game. General Zia's values are those of a lifetime army man general, martial-law administrator.

chief of staff, president. When the army overthrew the government of Zulfikar Ali Bhutto in July 1977, General Zia the com leader told the nation that the political parties were on a collision course that would throw the country into chaos. This risk could not be taken. The army had, therefore, to act, he said.

Chaos, crisis, order — the words would emerge again almost a decade later when General Zia endorsed the harsh crackdown in August on a political opposition that was refusing to cooperate with the cautious political formula he had established for a transition to democratic government. That the government may have and in the process cracked its own carefully nurtured image of progress toward democratic civilian rule, did not seem to matter. General Zia had set the rules by which he wanted the game of democracy played.

Those rules said that there was an election in February 1985, that a government was established with a fiveyear mandate and that there was no reason to hold a midterm vote just because the opposition didn't like

Miss Bhutto has a ready response to that. "Zia came to power by deposing a popularly elected government, she said soon after her return from exile in April. "He never had the people's mandate to take power. Now they hold a sham election and claim popular backing," she said. General Zia's motivation for attempting a return to civilian rule remains obscure. Some say he felt prolonged martial law was damaging to the army and that he genuinely wanted to get the troops back in the barracks. A variation on this theme is direct, day-to-day rule but wanted a safe, controlled government.

But General Zia remains distrustful of the political parties. So he set out a transition period under which a government would be formed after elections on a nonparty basis. The opposition, in a decision second-guessed by some today, decided to boycott the February 1985 voting. eral Zia's nominee, Mr. Junejo, as prime minister. A landholder from Sind, Mr. Junejo and Feel and Feel The resulting parliament chose Gen-Sind, Mr. Junejo had little national political experience. Many viewed him as little more than a thin front for General Zia's continued rule, an image the government works hard to dispel. But it was Mr. Junejo, according to General Zia, who broke from the political formula the general had outlined and plumped for the re-establishment of parties.

This set the stage for the return of Miss Bhutto. Young, dynamic and heir to one of the country's few truly national political names, she came back to the cheers of crowds. Her policy statements have been surprisingly restrained. There has been none of the baiting of the United States so common in Pakistani opposition politics. Her goal, she has said, is genuine nonalignment, a dependence on neither of the superpowers.

Her manifesto for domestic action has been equally modest, with limited programs designed to appeal to landless labor or small landbolders and to the urban poor and the middle classes. When she pressed her vision of democracy - defined as new elections now - and the Juneio-Zia government took up her challenge by forcing a test of power in the streets, she clearly lost the first round.

Pakistan now is entering a second round of what is likely to be a prolonged struggle to determine whose vision of the path to democracy will

General Zia and Mr. Junejo are the odd couple of South Asian politics, neither of them apparently quite happy with the other, according to close ervers, but linked by political fate. For them, the path to democracy calls for elections in 1990. For Miss Bhutto and others in the opposition, the counterargument is simple. A new political situation has been created by the re-emergence of political parties, and the country cannot know peace until there is a fair test at the polls.

Neither side is willing, as of now, to accept the other's rules. But that capacity for mutual understanding is the basic premise of a functioning democratic system.

U.S. Threats Don't Help Expansion

on America's trading partners, note bly West Germany and Japan; to adopt a program of global stimulation. Varying from appeals to self-uterest to thinly veiled threats, such tryings are not only misguided but lacious and dangerous.

The industrial economies seem in able of transforming the me and capable of transforming the gains in income and wealth generated by lower commodity prices, lower taxes, abundant liquidity and inige gains in financial assets into lasting economic growth. The fundamental cause lies in the uncertainties created by the United States' readiness to follow beguiling but untested theories.

The bewildering succession of U.S. policy experiments, and their failures, have resulted in two obvious brakes on growth. Policy and planning, in the private and governmental sectors, have turned defensive. The inducement to invest in "lasting" assets or adopt nonreversible economic

The second of th policies has disappeared.

A dominance of speculative, short-term economic thinking has broken the link between finance and the "real" world of output, demand and investment. Money chases money. ... Both Bonn and Tokyo, faithfully following the midterm strategy of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, show little inclination to be bullied into the quick thrills and long hangovers thatmark the American experience. But the assumption that global relaxation. of economic policy implies more real emand is wrong, as recent trends in. the United States demonstrate.

This assumption disregards the fundamental uncertainty that para-, lyzes physical investment and the ac-celerators and multipliers that spareconomic growth. Moreover, it glosses over the existence of a global oversupply of commodities and manufacturing capacity, and the need for West Germany and Japan to-save. that he wanted to get the army out of now so that the future retirement; needs of their aging populations can, be met. The crucial question is not a present deficiency of demand, but the solvency of future demand. Unquestionably inflation is low by recent standards, and short-term indicators augur well. But beneath the surface the cost of nontradable goods. continues to rise, contradictory claims on national income are only temporarily dormant, and global liquidity grows at rates incompatible with sustained price stability.

What policy initiatives should the United States take to serve the goal of enduring economic expansion?

First, recognizing the transition from the negemonic dollar order to a '-negotiated world system, Washington could strike an explicit bargain that includes a realistic domestic and international policy mix. The U.S. commitment would consist of a precisely restrictive fiscal program instead of a new fiscal adventure, while West Germany and Japan would undertake to accelerate implementation of their structural policies, notably their tax-reduction programs. These policies should, of course, be set within a disciplined monetary framework. Second, the new policy mix should be linked to an agenda for the return to a predictable international system: A standstill, at least, on the trade front; the fixing of realistic exchangerate bands; and restraints placed upon distortive capital flows. Now the overvalued exchange rate of the dollar has been corrected, the time is ripe for a second installment of the Plaza Hotel" agreement. There is a growing consensus that excessive cross-border risks assumed by banks and other financial institutions must be taken into account in capital ratios and reserve requirements.

Third, a genuine overhant of the international debt situation should replace wishful improvisation. The proposal of the United Nations Conerence on Trade and Development that international debt provisions be aligned with the reorganization opportunities provided to domestic debtors in the United States is realistic, provided that the liquidity needs for the consolidation can be covered by governments or by international institutions acting as their conduits. The OECD countries are unlikely to regain economic health unless the less developed world regains access to the capital markets of the West Obviously, these prescriptions merely consolidate the opportunities for modest growth. But unambitious targets are better than illusory ones.

prepare the agenda for the Helsinki review conference in November are likely to see a basic shift in Kremlin strategy. Soviet delegates can be expected to drop their resistance to talk about their country's compliance with the human rights provisions of the Helsinki accord.

In keeping with the new style of Mikhail Gorbachev displayed dur-ing the past year, the Soviet negotiators are likely to accept discussion of human rights but to try to turn the tables by charging the West with various rights violations. Such an offensive would help the Russians avoid fulfillment of the human rights obligations they assumed when they signed the Helsin-ki accord in 1975. For the West, the challenge is clear: to document the Kremlin's gross abridgements of Helsinki provisions and, by using leverage built into the accord, to link Soviet wishes for progress on security and trade issues to meaningful compliance with human rights obligations.

Soviet diplomats at past Helsinki meetings saw all talk of human rights as a threat to Communist society and an unacceptable intervention in Soviet internal affairs. Over time that tactic failed, as the United States effectively placed Soviet conduct in the dock of international public opinion. The first sign of a change in Moscow's approach came last February.

when Mr. Gorbachev unexpectedly embraced the word "humanitarian"

— a term unknown in Bolshevik political literature - and declared that Moscow would now deal with the "reunion of families" in "a humane and positive spirit." Follow-

Soviet economic hopes should be linked to humanitarian progress. 20 years. Twenty-five prisoners of conscience who had completed their sentences were still refused practice. They shared the fate of a long list of refuseniks who are desperate to emigrate to join families abroad, obtain medical treatment or simply see a loved one before dying of cancer or some other virulent ailment. Such argent appeals, which cry out for "humanitarian" consideration are simply swept aside by the Soviet party bosses.

In July, in another burst of newspeak, the Kremlin opened a department of humanitarian and cultural affairs in the foreign ministry. Soon afterward, it announced the establishment of a human rights commission, to be composed of intellectuals, workers and journalists, to correct Western "distorted opinion" about human rights in the Soviet Union. These new agencies will paign begun this year at Helsinki conferences in Ottawa and Bern, where the Russians rejected all charges about their human rights violations and went on the offensive to allege Western unemploy-ment, homelessness, racism, anti-Semitism and genocide.

The United States must use the forthcoming Helsinki conference to expose this reprehensible newspeak and to document before the bar of world opinion the Russians' egregious human rights violations. But we must go beyond documentation.

The fact that the Helsinki accord is made up of three "baskets," or sections, concerning security, trade and human rights creates an implicit linkage that the West can use to its advantage. Moscow very badly wants to make progress on a num-ber of security and trade issues. It wants, for one thing, to move the long-running mutual balanced force reduction talks under the um-brella of the Helsinki process. The Kremlin is eager to follow up the recently concluded Stockholm meeting on East-West confidencebuilding measures. And it still hopes for significant breakthroughs on East-West trade.

The United States ought to insist on real improvement in the Soviet human rights performance before it moves ahead in any of these other areas. The Helsinki review process offers an opportunity and a tailormade instrument for pursuing just this sort of linkage. It is too good an opportunity to miss.

Stupidity Dominates the Daniloff Affair

BOSTON — When an incident aggra-vates relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, there is a tendency to see it in conspiratorial terms. The ruthless Russians are plotting again. Intractable anti-Soviet elements are maneuvering the U.S. administration. But conspiracy is not usually responsible for episodes that heighten superpower tensions. Stapidity is.

The American officials who sent Gary

Powers on one last U-2 spy plane mission just before the planned Eisenhower Khrushchev summit meeting in 1960 were fools, not conspirators. Blunder, miscalculation, folly: Those are the words historians use.

The Nicholas Daniloff affair is an outstanding example of the stupidity factor at work. The Reagan administration has displayed extraordinary ineptitade: not once but again and again. Its blundering has cost Mr. Daniloff dearly, and put the administration itself in an increasingly embarrassing position. > To say that is not to excuse what the Russians have done to Mr. Daniloff. It is to recognize -as I did not at first, in my ontrage at Soviet behavior — that an American government of modest competence would have taken account of ikely Soviet reactions. Then the Daniwould have been more promptly solved.
The story starts with the arrest of Germadi Zakharov in a Queens, New York, subway station on Aug. 23. Mr. Zakharov was a Soviet employee of the Guyanese man in New York to get him computer information. The Guyanese was actually acting under orders for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

During those three years Mr. Zak-harov got no classified information. Then, last month, the FBI gave the Guyanese three documents bearing low classifications. He handed them in an envelope to Mr. Zakharov in the subway station, and the arrest followed.

The timing and manner of the Zakharov arrest were bound to look suspicious to Soviet officials. Why feed the first classified material to him, after all those years of playing him on the line, just as the superpowers were working toward a summit meeting?

What happened after the arrest was guaranteed to make the Zakharov case look provocative to the Soviet Union. U.S. officials laid on the publicity, no doubt wanting to show a success in spy prevention after the disasters of recent years. Then Washington did not follow the established practice of allowing Mr. Zakharov to be released in custody of the Soviet ambassador.

Anyone with the least knowledge of loff affair would never have started, or it the Soviet Union would have anticipat-would have been more promptly solved ed retaliation in crudely similar terms. That is what the Soviet tactic almost always is: tit for tat. The target for this predictable reaction turned out to be an innocent journalist.

retaliation for its handling of the Zakharov case. Or perhaps one should wonder whether anyone was in charge at all. There is no sign that in this divided, muddled administration anyone con-cerned with Soviet-American relations at a high level thought about the consequences before Mr. Zakharov's arrest. Once Mr. Daniloff was set up, experts saw one likely way out. That was to follow a 1978 precedent in Soviet-Amercan arrangements. Mr. Daniloff would be unconditionally released, then later Mr. Zakharov exchanged for the release of some Soviet dissidents. But the Reagan administration dithered, speaking in different tongues, letting the crisis build. Voices of rightist ideology and ambition - such men as Henry Kissinger and Jack Kemp - began denouncing any idea of a deal to free Mr. Daniloff. The administration had made it harder to dig its way out of the problem.

There is an irony in this tale. Ronald Reagan, the responsibility of office upon him, sees that there are reasons to do business with the Soviet Union. There are some areas of mutual interest. One is arms control, and it looks as if the superpowers are close enough to agree-ment on some arms issues to make a productive summit meeting possible.

Before he entered the White House, though, Mr. Reagan tried to make it hard for American presidents to do any business with the Soviet Union, He and his people, in the rightist backlash fostered by their ineptitude, are getting a The New York Times.

His conclusion that a conflict between the extremist Moslems (apparently referring to the Shiites of Hezbollah) and Israel would make the PLO-Israel battle of 1982 "look like a Boy Scouts' cookout" is absurd. The militant Moslems are no match for either the Amai Shittes or even the South Lebanon Army, with its minimal support by Israel.

His statement that Israel wants the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon to stay is a generalization, since Israel would welcome a UNIFIL that performed its mission of keeping terror-ists out of Israel or from launching rock-els at the northern Israeli communities, but Israel still questions the political stance of UNIFIL commanders. The Reagan administration indeed has refused to "lean on" Israel, and correctly so, but it also has not leaned on the various Arab states to end the continuing civil war in Lebanon.

It was not a "serious mistake" to send in the multinational force to stabilize Beirut simply because of the dealhs of : 300 U.S. and Prench troops. En : Finally, the United States did not "create this imbroglio." It negotiated the Israeli-Lebanese truce, which would have caused the virtually simultaneous withdrawal of Syrian, Israeli and all foreign forces from Lebanon, then backed away because the Moslems inside and outside Lebanon put too much pressure

The Vanishing of Species

By Erik Eckholm New York Times Service

TEADING biologists, fearful that a significant share of liv-ing species will disappear before they are even discovered, are escalating efforts to save tropical rain forests and other imperiled ecosys-

With recent indications that fewer than one-tenth of the Earth's species of plants and animals have been identified, much less studied, biologists are also calling for a crash effort to find and study millions of species before they are wiped out.

In recent decades, these scientists say, dramatic progress in molecular biology has stolen status and resources from the task of describing and comparing forms of life. Too few scientists are trained in taxonomy, the systematic ordering of species.

The scientists say that time is short because as tropical forests ---Earth — are cleared, thousands of species are possibly being lost each year. "It's astonishing that somethe most diverse ecosystems on thing as basic and important as the amount of diversity of life on Earth number of species to the nearest order of magnitude." Dr. Wilson said plausible estimates ranged Compared to the battles for en-

In their efforts to curb forest damage and to promote establishment of nature reserves, biologists have found themselves in unfamiliar territory. as insects and higher animals. Each species, whether charming to most humans or not, is a unique repository of genetic and ecological information.

ABOUT half the 1.6 million described species are insects, with beetles the biggest subgroup. Biologists have long assumed that hundreds of thousands, if not millions, more insects await discovery, largely because every time they study a new patch of rain forest they find many new species. New exploration of what some describe as the major uncharted biological frontier, the canopy level of rain forests, provides evidence that the number insect species is much higher than previously imagined.

Dr. Terry Erwin of the Smithsonian Institution has developed a technique for fogging forest trees with insecticides, allowing system-atic collection of all the insects that

IN BRIEF

Icebergs Linked to El Niño NEW YORK (NYT) - While daily forecasting of sceberg conditions has been of concern to ships our since the Titanic hit one and sank off Newfoundland in 1912, the offshore-oil industry is seeking seasonal forecasts for planning activities on the Grand Banks. A study undertaken on its behalf has made the surprising discovery that weather in the tropical Paris ic appears to be a factor. Heavy iceberg intrusion into the oil-drilling area, it turns out, is typically preceded by an occurrence of El Niño, known also as a Southern Oscillation. At such times warm water overrides the cold, nutrient-rich current along the Pacific coast of South America, causing torrential rains on land and extensive fish kills at sea. Since 1950 there have been three cycles of high iceberg counts — 1957-1959; 1972-1974, and 1983-1985. Each was preceded by an El Niño. A better predicter, according to a report no the study, published by Arctic Sciences Ltd. of Sidney, British Columbia, appears to be the sea ice in Davis Strait, between Greenland and Baffin Land, in Jana. ary. The extent to which that strait is blocked by floes is critical because most icebergs pass through it

Test to Spot Disease-Prone

BOSTON (UPI) - Researchers have developed a relatively simple test that apparently can identify children who will be prone to heart disease as adults by measuring the levels of two proteins in their blood.

A study published in the New England Journal of Medicine found that children whose parents had suf-fered heart attacks tended to have abnormal levels of both proteins, which are associated with the regulation of cholesterol that clogs arteries.

Scientists analyzed the blood of 2,416 children aged 5 to 17. On the average, children whose mother or father had suffered a heart attack showed 2 percent higher levels of a protein known as apolipoprotein B and 3 percent lower levels of a protein called apolipoprotein A-1. Apoliproprotein B is associated with a "bad" form of cholesterol known as low-density lipoprotein (LDL), which tends to accumulate in acteries and sets the stage for heart attacks. Apoliporotein All is associated with a "good" form of cholesterol known as high-density lipoprotein (HDL), which helps rid the body of LDL.

Speeding Up Immunization

ATLANTA (AP) - Federal health officials hope to set more children immunized and save parents money by recommending that some common childhood vac cines be administered simultaneously instead of three months apart.

Under previous federal guidelines, a child receives a shot for measles, mumps and rubella at age 15 months, then returns at 18 months for a fourth diptheriatetanus-pertussis vaccination and a third oral dose of polio vaccine. The immunization committee at the national Centers for Disease Control recommended giving the vaccinations during the same visit to the doctor. Timetables for other doses of DTP and polio vaccines, which begin at 2 months, would not be

Eve Movement and Dyslexia

SOUTH WALES, New York (AP) — An eye-movement test might diagnose preschool children with dyslexia, a reading disability that afflicts nearly 20 million Americans, a researcher says, but two other experts say more work is needed.

Dr. George Pavlidis, professor of psychiatry and pediatrics at Rutgers University Medical School, presented his findings at a symposium on dyslexia held here at The Gow School, the United States's oldest college preparatory school for dyslexic boys and the cource of many of his subjects.

Dr. Pavlidis said he found that a significant percentage of the dyslexics he tested had erratic eye movenents while reading. Finding similar patterns in preschool children could lead to an early diagnosis of the condition, he said.

Dr. Drake D. Duane, associate professor of neurology at Mayo Medical School, in Rochester, Minnesota, said the technique has potential, but is not a definitive diagnosis. Dr. James Kavanaugh, a researcher with the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, said he knows and respects Dr. Pavlidis's work but believes further questions need the layers could mean the difference between Earth's frying or freezing, a scientist says.

"Activity within the sun's various layers may well be a key factor in the Earth's climate," Dr. Edward Rhodes, a University of Southern California astronomer, said. "Though we take the sun's energy output for granted, a change in that output of just a fraction of 1 percent could make the difference between our freezing."

Lyon: A City of Taste

HISTORY

At a Glance

43 B.C.: An Imperial City First settled by Celt fishermen and boatmen who name the site Lugdunum, Lyon becomes a military colony in 43 B.C. under Lucius Munatius Plancus. The Roman emperor Augustus later makes Lyon the cap-ital of Gaul and under successive reigns, the imperial city, situated at the confluence of the Rhône and Saone rivers, becomes the most cosmopolitan trading center of the Gaul country.

1312: Lyon is Annexed

 To Kingdom of France After Charlemagne's reign, the city comes under the domination of archbishops and the church lords of Lyon. Rising mercantile stical forces come into conflict. The city, situated in the troubled border zone between the Holy Roman Empire and the emergent kingdom of France, is annexed to France in 1312.

1536: A Center for Silk

In 1536, Lyon becomes a center of silk manufacturing. The activity, encouraged by King François I, enriches the country by reducing purchases of Italian silks. The arts flourish. Lyon is one of the most active printing centers in Europe.

i. 1793: A City Besieged

The Revolution brings turbulence. Do-mestic markets collapse, foreign ones close and the silk industry slumps. With the Reign of Terror, ruling royalist and moderate factions oppose the Convention. In 1793, the city is beseiged by the Montagnards Republican forces.

1863: Crédit Lyonnais Opens Its Doors

Lyon returns to prosperity during the First Empire through the manufacturing of silk. Credit Lyonnais is founded in 1863 by the financier Henri Germain. It develops into one of the world's largest banks by the end of the century.

Mastering the Fine Art of Chocolate

By Patricia Wells

YON - In 1933, following the counsel of his parish priest, Maurice Bernachon appren-ticed himself to a master chocolate maker named Debeauger in the Alpine village of Pont de Beauvoison. He was then 14, and when his mother journeyed with him from their home just a few kilometers away, she could not afford to buy even a tiny package, a mere sampling, of Debeauger's famed

That was not so long ago, but at that time in France chocolate was reserved for the wealthy. Those of modest means might, if they were lucky, become acquainted with a chocolate truffle on a birthday, an anniversary or at Christmas.

Today, of course, anyone with a few spare francs in his pocket can afford a rich sampling of the best and purest chocolate in the world, created by Maurice Bernachon and his son, Jean-Jacques. Bernachon chocolates are so rich that they must be savored, morsel by morsel, much like a fine Bordeaux that calls for pensive sipping, not guzzling. A visit to the pristine, chocolate-colored shop along Lyon's fashionable Cours Franklin Roosevelt is a sensory experience. The chocolates are displayed like

A Metropolis In the Making

By Brigid Phillips

YON — Four centuries ago, Lyon was a world capital of commerce at the hub of the silk trade. By the 21st century, city leaders envisage a marketplace of modern technology that will once again make Lyon an international crossroads for Europe and beyond. There is already an array of high-technology industries in France's second biggest city and Lyon is gradually building an infrastructure to

Yet only 15 years ago, Lyon seemed ready to subside into a sleepy and closed provincial city, wary of outsiders and slipping further from the economic mainstream with each local industry that closed down or moved away. In the 1950s, for example, the city decided against building an international airport.

Since the mid-1970s, many head offices and mainstays of the Lyonnais economy such as parts of Rhône-Poulenc moved away and the region lost more than a million jobs in heavy industry and farming. Lyon's main claim to international renown was as a city of fine food, described once by a West German president as "a city near Bocuse," referring to the chef, Paul Bocuse.

"Lyon was a city that had faded away," said Jean Carrière, chairman of the Société Lyonnaise de Banque, the main regional bank. "It was a city with a great past awaiting a renaissance. Happily, now it is regaining strength and Lyon is on the verge of a huge expansion, a

The rebirth of Lyon has been a combination of brinkmanship and more recently, some careful planning. The city was "on the point of perishing" until the early 1970s, when local administrations grouped in a joint salvage effort, said Jean Chemain, director of Aderly, the Association for Development of the Lyon Region. Aderly groups chambers of commerce and industry to promote developm

Lyon is now linked to the major cities of Europe by the high-speed TGV (train à grande vitesse), an expanding network of autoroutes and, since 1974, by an international airport. A 1984 survey showed that 29 percent of business leaders based in Paris considered Lyon their top choice to relocate in the French provinces. They listed Lyon's geographic location, its large population and international communication as its greatest assets.

The multinational computer firm Hewlett-Packard has already decided to build a manufacturing center in the Lyon area. In a recent report explaining the decision, it said Lyon was at the "epicenter of the European market of tomorrow, has a range of industry in the immediate area, a remarkable research potential" as well as an "attractive

YON — Straddling the trade route between the Mediterranean and the Low Countries, Lyon from the 16th century became a center for international trade fairs, foreign exchange operations, merchandise and commodity dealings and for financing risk. These traditions live on and, today, Lyon is one of the rare French provincial cities where financial decisions do not have to await approval from Paris.

Lyon financial institutions and investors continue to innovate, as is shown by these recent developments:

 Almost everyone doing business with tourists in the city, from cab drivers and hotels to restaurants and boutiques, will accept payment in travelers checks in the European Community's composite currency, the ECU (European Currency Unit) as well as in francs. in financing Lyon's regional businesses, accounting for 40 percent of foreigncurrency loans from the Société Lyonnaise de Banque.

by Club Agri, a partnership set up by the Société Lyonnaise de Banque and the merchant banking arm of Banque Nationale de Paris, Lyon-based Rhône-Poulenc Agrochimie and Pernod-Ricard, a liquor company, with two government-funded research institutes as nonfinancial partners. With 20 million francs ($2.98 million) in seed capital, they seek to invest in research of interest to agricultural and food-processing companies at the initial research stage.

• In France, where only 13 percent of trucks and industrial vehicles are leased, compared with three times as many in the United States, financing to change that situation is coming from a Lyon Bourse capital increase for the oldest independent French vehicleleaser, Locamion.

 Lyon has its own independent ven-ture-capital fund, called Siparex, which since 1978 has been investing in medium-sized companies in southwestern France. With a 10.1-million-franc capital base, it has invested in 55 compa-nies. Last year, it earned 17.4 million francs in net profits for an international shareholder group.

• A.G.D.E. Electronic, S.A., situated outside Lyon at tiny St-Laurent-de-Chamlousset, is the best financed French maker of switchmode and uninterruptable power supply apparatuses for data-processing and electronics applications. According to its president, Serge Barthèlèmy, "the bulk of the funding came from the provinces," mostly from the A.G.D.E. rural jobcreation cooperative, which does subcontracting, but also from Societé Lyonnaise de Banque, Siparex and Alpha Ventures of Aix-en-Provence, which groups Dutch, U.S. and French venture

As a rich area, Lyon cannot offer enerous government aid and subsidies to foreign investors the way less-privileged regions do. It does have access to job-creation grants, special financing for small companies and research investment incentives, but the amounts involved are minimal. Companies tak-ing on former workers of Saint-Gobain are eligible for loans at 6 percent over 10 years with a five-year grace period. But compared with French towns that have high unemployment, Lyon is a city that foreign investors have to pay to

Regional Council Plays Quiet but Key Role

HARBONNIERES-LES-BAINS — Even taxi drivers hailed outside Lyon city hall are not always sure of the way to the regional council, the miniparliament for the Rhônes-Alpes region that is located a few kilometers outside the city at this spa. Therefore, the Lyonnais can be forgiven for not being aware of the council's decisions, or its growing powers, particularly in education and the training of apprentices for industry.

The council, along with the 21 others in France, is likely to assume a bigger role in welcoming and helping foreign investors, now that the government has decided to trim the budget of the French Industrial Development Agen-

The council may remain remote, but its president, Charles Beraudier, is a household name in the city where he holds an impressive number of public offices: assistant mayor in charge of financial and budgetary matters for the past 30 years; vice president of the council for the urban conglomeration the Rhône-Alpes regional council for Things move faster when three decisions are taken by one man," he said. Mr. Beraudier, 66, is a heavyweight in size and political clout. He is the link between the city, run by his friend, Mayor Francisque Collomb, and the eight departments and five million inhabitants of the Rhône-Alpes region — "a territory the size of Switzerland," Mr. Beraudier pointed out. "Or the population of Denmark."

Within the French context, Rhônes-Alpes is the second biggest region for earch and development after the He de France, or Greater Paris.

The regional council has a gleaming glass headquarters at Charbonnières and a budget of around 2 billion francs ($300 million). About 22 percent goes toward improving school buildings and another 20 percent for job training, an important service in a region where one-third of the population is under 20.

The conservative parties, Rally for the Republic and Union for French Democracy, and their allies have a majority of one, an even closer margin than their narrow majority in the na-tional government. Mr. Beraudier, a former Resistance leader who helped form the original Gaullist party, the Rally of the French People, is today a supporter of Raymond Barre, the former prime minister and the leading politician from Lyon.

ARDILLY — Firms as well as airlines have developed the "hub" concept and none more so than Black & Decker, the U.S. multinational for household appliances and do-it-yourself goods, which has chosen the Lyon region as one of its main European manufacturing and distribution hubs.

The company sells up to 2.5 million products (hand drills, kitchen aids, gar-den mowers and wood saws) in France yearly and they all pass through Black & Decker's computerized packing and dispatching center at Dardilly on the outskirts of Lyon.

The whole range of cordless equip ment, the company's technological pride and joy, developed and manufac-tured at Dardilly and at nearby Brezins, is outward bound for French cities and also for Britain, West Germany, Italy and Spain.

Efficiency rather than fanfare is the Black & Decker motto. In this respect, the U.S. company sits well with the Lyon business community, which is both dynamic and canny.

Many other U.S. companies have taken advantage of the geographical position of Lyon and the seriousness with which business is conducted there. Lyon is both central France and the beginning of the south, with tiled roofs visible among modern offices. The 28 high-speed TGV trains a day also make it a kind of suburb of Paris, a term not to the liking of the Lyonnais but an economic reality. There are U.S. manufacturing units in the immediate vicinity of the city and along the local "Silicon Valley" stretch-ing through the new town of Isle d'Abeu to Grenoble. Among the big names are Caterpillar tractors, Carrier (United Technologies) air-conditioning equipment, American Cyanamid pharmaceuticals and, of course, Hewlett Packard, the computer maker.

fice in Lyon employs about 300 people. Other American, as well as European and Japanese firms, have set up marketing offices approaching the size of Hewiett Packard.

Robert Maury, international manager at the Lyon Chamber of Commerce, commented: "Lyon's commercial role is growing in importance with the es-tablishment of U.S. companies such as Digital and Wang, the latter with its software translation office, but also Nixdorf from West Germany, Canon and Marubeni from Japan and others.

"Lyon and region has become a technopolis, not a mere science park, and with the aid of its universities, research centers and engineering schools, it is attracting industries in biotecimology, health, new materials, fine chemicals and agro-chemicals."

Even among the conservative silk houses within the city, at least one company president, Robert Provent, of scarf-maker Marc Rozier, is pondering a share issue. "It would have to be a private placement at first because we are still too small to go public." he said.

Although his firm is ranked second or third in France among companies making scarves, its sales are only 28 million francs per year. But sales growth in 1985 was a hefty 27 percent and the firm expects an

Mr. Provent said: "A small company which has been in the same business for 100 years may seem odd to your readers. A small company which has had a solid relationship with the same bank for over 100 years may seem odder."

In fact, Marc Rozier is one of the tiny number of firms not located in the Ain department that bank with BRA, a part of Crédit Industriel et Commerc of banks. And it is another member of the club, Société Lyonnaise de Banque, which has taken the lead in launching Lyon's new the Commission des Opérations de la Bourse, the French market watchdog - a sort of Securities and Exchange Commission — "the companies introduced on the Bourse in Lyon had proportionally lower costs than-others, with total expenses of 485,000 to 665,000 francs."

Helping Lyon companies grow large enough to go public has been a well-developed venture-capital market, with foreign participation

Société Lyonnaise de Banque has helped too. He has been promoting the Lyon stock market with international institutional inestors (together with Merrill, Lynch) and this summer he organized a seminar with Banque Pasche on the subject for 200 bank-

Mr. Thanaberger thinks that for small, capital-hungry companies, access to stock markets is the key to growth. "Over 20 percent of the small- and medium-sized firms which are listed in France are quoted in Lyon, as against 2 percent of larger firms," he noted.

The banker would like to arrange a new issue for Marc Rozier, or for one of its larger rivals, such as Bucol. "I have always dreamed of launching a silk company on the Lyon Bourse," he said, "as a sort of historical return.

Lyon's second market thus far has no silk house listed, but it includes smaller companies in every business from industrial weighing equipment (Precia) to microcom-puter services for the accounting profession

The pleasant squares and winding covered streets that used to be the silk weaving quarter still make for much of Lyon's charm. That charm is being enhanced by ambitious renovation projects, including the elegant opera house, and repainting facades in the original rose and sienna tones instead of the grimy gray that became Lyon's image. Lyon also has mountains and seashore just a few hours away and some of France's finest restaurants.

But much of Lyon's attraction is part of a deliberate strategy to move away from dependence on dying industries and attract the high-technology businesses of the

The most recent integrated project is the Gerland science park, which groups the laborato-ries of the Merieux Institute, a producer of vaccines, the Pasteur institute, the new math and science departments of the Ecole Normale Supérieure, as well as housing, a park and a marina. "We want to attract Silicon

Lyon has already made the ghetto mistake by relegating im-migrants to substandard housing outside the city center. Immigrant crime has grown at a worrying rate and SOS Racism, an antiracist organization, sees Lyon as a potential hotbed of anti-im grant conflict. But the city has tried to head off the problem by converting and renovating build ings in immigrant areas and dis-persing the immigrant population Lyon boasts eight universities and 22 institutes of higher education. It is drawing back established industries and is drawing more high-tech industries and in ternational organizations. Even the heartiest promoters of Lyon admit there are still obstacles to its becoming a genuine ly international city. This city is also the home of one of France's more intended opera and ballet companies, of one of the country's leading state-subsidized atheaters, of a symphony orchestra of growing importance, and of what may be the only thesater anywhere devoted entirely to dance. It is the birthplace of Guignol, the puppet known to wirtually every French child and the principal schemeter of one of the worst enduring examples. character of one of the most enduring examp lof puppet theater.

It would be perfectly accurate to say that Lyon's immical theatrical history dates from Roman times, as was discovered in the 1930s when archaeological digs on the slope of the Fourvière hill above the Saone River uncovered two characteristic Roman theaters.

The large theater, the oldest in France and about the same size as the better known and better preserved ones in Orange and Arles, once held as many as 10,000 speciators. The smaller one, the odéon, similar in its semicircular layout but seating only 3,000, is nearby. Models of the two theaters as they were in ancient times can be found in the nearby Musée Gallo-Romain, a recently completed museum with a comprehensive presentation of the history of Lugdunum from prehistoric through Roman times

But it is also true that Lyon's lively and expanding cultural activity is largely a creation of the last comple of decades, partly a function of the city's spectacular development beginning in the middle of this century, parily of the decentralization policies of successive Prench governments. Some of it also has to do with Lyon's character as a European crossroads city, and as an industrial center its theaters, scattered around the metropolitan area rather than concentrated in one part of town, cater to a variety of audiences

A useful point at which to date the beginning of Lyon's artistic expansion is 1969, when Louis Erlo — an experienced operatic stage director and a native Lyonnais - was named director of the Opera de Lyon. At that point it was a sleepy provincial institution performing a couple of times a week for a dwindling audience.

Mr. Erlo put together a solid artistic team and embarked on an ambitious policy that included an adventurous repertory, ample rehearsal time and the scheduling of each work seven or eight times. To get the audience back he went out to factories and schools and sold the Lyomais on it — no easy task. Mr. Erln. who is now also artistic director of the Aix-en-Provence Festival, is still the Opera's co-director, with Jean-Pierre Brossmann. The current music director is the British conductor John Eliot Gardiner. The company's reputation has begun to spread — the delightful Lyon production of Chabrier's "L'Etoile" went to the Edinburgh Festival and was recorded, and last year's staging of Weber's "Oberon" (in the original English) got wide attention. ity, "The Excursions of Mr. Broucek" by the Czech composer Leos Janacek. In the spring, the decrepit, 19th-century opera house will be closed for an overdue renovation, but performances will continue on other stages, including Bellim's "Norma" in June in the Roman the

The Opera's ballet company, now under the direction of Françoise Adret, has been getting some attention on its own with its production last season - staged and choreographed by Magny Marin - of Prokofiev's "Cinderella." It has already been seen in Paris and at this year's Edinburgh Festival, and the troupe will spend a lot of this season touring with it and other ballets in its repertory, including to New York and Berkeley, California, in January and February and South America in May.

But what has put Lyon on the dance map was the creation a few seasons ago of the Maison de la Danse. On the initiative of a former journalist, Guy Darmet, a disused 1930s movie house in the working-class Croix Rousse section of the city was converted with the idea of providing a home for some local dance companies and of booking outside dance attractions.

In a short time, the Maison de la Danse made Lyon a major stop for the world's leading troupes, and two years ago Mr. Darmet expanded the idea by kicking off the season with an autumn festival, the Biennale de la Danse. (In alternate years, this spot on the calendar is filled by the Berlioz Festival.)

This year's Biennale de la Danse is is built around the theme of German Expressionist dance and the heritage of Mary Wigman, the German modern dance pioneer and choreographer, with performances in several theaters around the city.

Among the companies already seen in the program are those of Susan Burge, the José Limon Dance Company, the Compagnie Dominique Bagouet, and Karin Waelmer. Still to come are the Essen Ballet with a Kurt Jooss program (Sept. 25-26, Theatre des Célestins), the Cullberg Ballet of Sweden with "Romeo and Juliet" and "The House of Bernarda" (Sept. 27-29, Theatre du Huitième), the Groupe Emile Dubois with "Mammame" (Sept. 29-30, Audi-torium Maurice Ravel), and the Alwin Nikolais Dance Theater (Oct. 1-4, Theatre du Huitième).

The Nikolais company closes the festival, but the expressionist theme is continued at the Maison de la Danse Oct. 16 to 18 with three performances of a reconstruction of Oskar Schlem-mer's "Friadic Ballet," a much written-of, rarely seen dance offshoot of the Bauhaus expe-

Concert life in Lyon, and the Rhône-Alps region, is dominated by the Orchestre National de Lyon under its music director, Serge Baudo. Its scope has been greatly expanded in recent seasons by being relieved of its duties in the Opera's pit (the Opera now has its own orchestra) to concentrate on concert work, and the construction of the Auditorium Maurice Ravel as part of the new urban complex in the Part-Dieu district on the left bank of the Rhôve. The Auditorium is principally a concert hall, but it can accommodate open-stage theater produc-tions, as it will next May when the Orchestra

National and the Opera join forces for a series of performances of Wagner's "Lohengrin."

In the realm of spoken theater, Lyon is chiefdistinguished as the home of the Théâtre National Populaire, in the working-class suburb of Villeurbanne, After the Comédie Française, the TNP is the most important French national theater, although it comes from a newer and different tradition.

The actor, stage director and author Roger Planchon took over the municipal Theatre de la Cité in Villeurbanne in 1957 and pursued a policy whose gniding lights were Bertolt Brecht and Jean Vilar, who founded the TNP in Paris with the goal of bringing good theater to a mainly working-class andience. After Mr. Vilar's departure, French cultural authorities transferred the TNP banner and prestige to Villeurbanne and Mr. Planchon, whose inventive stagings have been among the landmarks of postwar French theater.

At the other pole is the Theatre des Célestins, near the Saone in the central part of the city. The handsome 19th-century building is the home of an eclectic and traditional repertoire. The Théstre du Huitième (so-called because it is in the city's Eighth Arrondissement) is being taken over this season by Jérôme Savary, whose Grand Magic Circus and other exuberant stagings have made him one of the best known figures in European theater. His production last year of the musical "Cabaret" was a hit here and is making the rounds of other French theaters thic season.

But perhaps the most Lyonnais of all the city's theaters is the Nouveau Guignol de Lyon. At the end of the 18th century an unemployed silk worker, Laurent Mourguet, invented the puppet Guignol — along with Guignol's wife Madelon and his crony Gnafron — in a succession of comedies.

There are Guignol theaters all over France and several in Lyon, but this is the mother house and there has always been a Mourgnet descendant running this theater, now in the basement of the Palais dn Conservatoire, on the right bank of the Saone. The language is rich in Lyonnais argot and the characters are recognizable local archetypes.

Guignol's costume, with his pigtail and tight black hat, is that of a silk worker of the period, while Gnafron's nose is the color of Beaujolais. Performances include matinees of the classic Guignol repertory, mainly for kids, and pieces tending to political satire in the evening.

Paul Bocuse

AUL Bocuse has been such an avid ambassador for Lyon that many foreigners know the city only as a gourmet paradise and home of the restaurant Paul Bocuse.

Foreign Trade Minister Michel Noir calls Mr. Bocuse "the surrogate trade minister." One Lyon official says his name is the city's most successful export. Mr. Bocuse himself says simply that he was born here, and he wants to do his bit to help improve the image of Lyon, a city that he says is still "not well known."

Mr. Bocuse has built his renowned restaurant into an international cooking industry. He set out at age 16 to apprentice with France's best chefs and returned to eventually take over the lamily restaurant at Collonges-au-Mont-d'Or, seven miles (12 kilometers) up the Saone River from Lyon. He got official recognition 25 years ago when he was awarded his first star in the Michelin guide rating system. The three-star rating came four years later.

But Mr. Bocuse's reputation was built more on his role in starting a new style of cooking that the restaurant guide Gault et Millan called nouvelle cuisine. Mr. Bocuse once described nouvelle cuisine's use of lighter sauces and underdone vegetables as Tike women who don't wear bras and girdles. You know what's underneath. Cooking, too, should no longer be a mys-

Mr. Bocuse later disavowed the nonvelle cuisine revolution because of the bastardizations it produced. But his own reputa-tion has lived on. He has made regular pilgrimages to the United States to promote his line of wines.

Although Mr. Bocuse leaves much of the cooking to his team of about 20 chefs and aides, he still can be seen at 6 A.M. tearing through Lyon's main market on the quais of the Saone, buying for his

Raymond Barre

AYMOND Barre is a politician as closely associated with Lyon as silk and fine cuisine. Since be was first elected a deputy to the French National Assembly in 1978, Lyon has been his base. Mr. Barre was prime minister in the last five years of Valery Giscard d'Estaing's presidency, and, if he has his way, he will be president.

Mr. Barre is the only French politician to have announced his candidacy for president in the 1988 election.

In parliamentary elections in March, Mr. Barre made a disappointing showing in the heated contest in his Lyon district. Since the vote, Mr. Barre has followed a policy of strict silence that has cost him popularity nation polls. larity nationally, according to recent

His plan is apparently to stay out of the fray as conservative Prime Minister Jacques Chirac conducts his fragile experiment of governing under a Socialist presi-dent. Mr. Barre has always maintained that such a relationship could not work, and he seems to be waiting in the wings until he is proved right.

Locally, Mr. Barre is as much an enigma as he has become for the rest of the coun-. try. He is not a native son - he was born 62 years ago on the French Indian Ocean island of Reunion. But since he decided to run for office from Lyon, the city has become what the French press calls his

Although they take pride in the reflected glory of such a prominent politician, many Lyonnais believe Mr. Barre uses rather than serves Lyon. He is credited, though, with helping to arrange the transfer of the new Ecole Normale Supérieure from Paris to Lyon and working to stimulate the phenomenal growth of the Lyon rare jewels, with the care and flair that the French instinctively bestow upon all they value and respect. And the aroma is a heady mingling of bitter chocolate, sweet butter, caramelized sugar. vanilla and roasted nuts,

But what distinguishes Bernachon chocolates from the hundreds of others around the world? Quite simply, it is Bernachon's dedication to perfection, a dedication that others have lost or perhaps never knew. The Bernachons, who run one of the world's few remaining made-fromscratch chocolate shops, insist upon quality ingredients. They compare the art of chocolate making to wine making.

"But instead of grapes, you've got beans, and everything hinges on the quality of those beans; the soil on which they are grown, their care, their blending," exolained Jean-Jacques.

While the majority of chocolate makers are content to buy factory-produced fondant or couverture, the basic "dough" of the chocolate art, the Bernachons continue to oversee the process from start to finish, using the fin-est and freshest ingredients in their classic truffles filled with crème fraiche and the 40-odd other varieties of handmade Bernachon chocolates, candies, cakes and pastries.

They begin with top-quality beans from Venezuela, Ecuador, Trinidad and Madagascar — cocoa beans that account for a small percentage of the world's production, beans prized for their richness, their distinctive nutty flavor. The Bernachons use slender, pungent vanilla beans from the Indian Ocean island of Réunion, arrange for cocon butter from the Netherlands, secure pistachios from Sicily, wainuts from the French Dauphine region, hazel-nuts from the Piedmont in Italy, and both sweet and bitter almonds from Provence and Spain.

The butter is the superior, sweet, French beurre de Charentes; the cream is pure Lyonnaise. Before the chocolates reach the newly remodeled Bernachon boutique they will pass through the hands of perhaps a dozen em-

Everything begins with the beans. By the time they reach Lyon, they have already fermented in the open air in their country of origin to rid them of their natural astringency and bitterness. Just a bit larger than a coffee bean, they are still a pale, light tan, a bit moist and just barely fragrant The young Mr. Bernachon slowly empties a burlap sack full of Venezuelan chango beans into a shiny red rossting machine.

He roasts the beans, still in their thin shells, for 20 to 30 minutes, checking them every two or three minutes. Rossting time varies from day to day, depending on the temperature of the roaster, the moisture of the beans and the final flavor one is seeking.

The shells are sifted away and blend. The assertive Venezuelan beans are blended with more delicate, subtler beaus from Trinidad and Medagascar, then with sugar, vanilla and a supplementary dose of costly cocoa butter, added to improve the texture and gloss of the final product. Together, the ingredients are passed slowly through a grinder.

The chocolate emerges in pa-per-thin sheets, crackly and dry. At last, we have a blend that tastes of chocolate. It must now be smoothed out, undergoing a process known as conchage: For three days, the mixture is warmed to the meiting point, then rocked back and forth 10 to 12 hours a day under the constant supervision of the Bernachon staff.

Later, the thick and shiny brown liquid is poured into large stainless vats to cool overnight and, finally, work can begin on the variety of chocolate prepara-tions. Cooled chocolate is formed into blocks, to be wrapped, stored and taken from aging rooms as needed, to prepare the chocolates, the cakes and pastries sold in the retail shop. NYSE Up in Moderate Trading NEW YORK - Prices on the New York Stock Exchange pushed ahead Wednesday, continuing the rally that began on Monday. Trading was moderate. Analysts credited the rise to higher bond prices and bargain-hunting among consumerproduct and drug stocks.

By 3 P.M., an hour before the close, the Dow

Jones average of 30 industrials was up 6.89

Although most U.S. stock market tables in this edition are from the 4 P.M. close in New York, for time reasons, this article is based on the market at points to 1,804.70. It rose 4.36 points on Tues-

Advancing issues outnumbered declining ones by about 7-5.
Volume totaled 117.26 million shares, up from 108.7 million on Tuesday.

Prices were higher in moderate tradi-American Stock Exchange. Analysts said traders were encouraged by the market's recovery Monday and Tuesday, during which the Dow Jones industrial average gained 35.16 points, after the record-breaking sell-off earlier this month.

Many market forecasters questioned the durability of the rebound. But dealers nevertheless continued bidding for stocks whose prices were beaten down in the general drop two weeks ago.

Analysts said equities also drew support from the firmer tone of the credit markets. At 3 P.M., the bellwether 30-year Treasury bond was up almost a point, or nearly $10 for each $1,000

Hang Seng Tops 2,000

HONG KONG - Hong Kong stock prices rose sharply in hectic trading Wednesday. The market's key barometer, the Hang Seng index, closed above 2,000 for the first time.

Brokers said buying by managers of big British and U.S. investment funds lifted the Hang Seng index 15.70 points, to 2,008.30.
The previous high was 1,997.92 on Sept. 11.
Fund managers still see local stocks as relatively cheap and they are getting a bit worried about the outlook for some markets overseas," one broker said.

Traders said the Dow's ability to remain above the 1,800-level gave investors a small psychological lift. 'Anytime you have three up days in a row.

it's obviously a positive," said Gerald Simmons, nanaging director in listed equity trading at Smith Barney, Harris Upham. But Mr. Smmons said the market is still consolidating after the "considerable damage" it incurred the week before last. 'Prices are higher but the market's leadership is suspect," he said. "Until volume picks up, you won't see a significant advance." Many of the day's best gainers were stocks that were heavily sold during the market's recent plunge, Mr. Simmons noted.

USX topped the active list, giving up ground. The stock fell 1% Tuesday on indications that T. Boone Pickens had sold his stake. (UPI, AP)

Stock Market Plunge Dims Enthusiasm for New Issues

By VARTANIC G. VARTAN New York Times Service

EW YORK — The sharp decline in stock prices over the past lew weeks has cast a decided chill over the formerly "hot" new issue market. As a result, initial public offerings of companies have often been reduced in size or, in many cases, even postponed. Prices commanded by these newcomers, too, have dropped.

Many people haven't made money recently in new issues and, as a result, this has become a buyer's market," said Richard I. Franyo, head of corporate finance for Alex Brown & Sons inc. in Baltimore. As of last week, the 100 most recent new offerings showed virtually no change from their initial price in stock-market trading; an average gain of just 0.2 percent, according to the publication "Gorar Public: The IPO Re-

"High-quality deals will get done, but marginal ones are apt to fall by the wayside."

It was a far different story in the spring, when new issues — and stock prices in general were soaring. In late April, the 100 most recent new offerings outperformed even the market's well-known barometers by a handy margin. On average, these new issues were ahead by 26.1

Earlier this year, for example, shares of financial companies going public typically rose to immediate premiums. But the latest survey shows many companies in this group trading below their initial offering price. These include Dime Savings Bank of New York, Bank of Stamford and Grove Hall Savings Bank of York, Bank of Stamford and Grove Hall Savings mank or Brighton, Massachusetts.

Some summertime offerings still enjoy substantial premiums. Shares in Marble Financial Corp. of Rutland, Vermont, last week were 29 percent ahead of their original price, according to The IPO Reporter. And Quipp Inc., a Miami-based maker of newspaper handling equipment, had increased 50 percent.

But since August, new offerings have been confined mostly to smaller issues, unlike the blockbusters that were brought to market this spring. The largest initial public offering ever came in May, when investors snapped up $1.2 billion worth of stock in The Henley Group Inc., a collection of diverse companies spun HANKS TO this and similarly large offerings, new-issue volume for the year vaulted to $12.7 billion by the end of August, said Susan Gallant, editor of The IPO Reporter. That tops the previous record of $12.5 billion for 1983, when high-technology offerings dominated the roller-coaster new-issue market of that year.

Even the Henley Group's record may topple before this year is out. Cocs-Cola Co. said recently that it would sell 51 percent of its newly formed bottling company to the public in what could rank as the largest initial public offering. Analysts have estimated that the transaction would raise at least $1 billion and probably several hundred million dollars more.

And leoking further shead since analysts have predicted that the government through thousands the government through the proof of the more cautious environment now prevailing Controlled by the investor, Saul P. Steinberg, Relisance is a holding company with major insurance operations. This carback was the result of a decision by Mr. Steinberg and his family not to offer the 4.29 million shares they had planned to sell.

Moreover, the issue was expected to be priced between $16 and $19 a share, with Dreitel Burnham Lambert Inc. heading the See STOCKS, Page 17

Honeywell Plans Restructuring

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
MINNEAPOLIS — Honeywell Inc. said Wednesday that it intended to restructure its information systems business and to negotiate with Cie. des Machines Bull of France and NEC Corp. of Japan on combining its computer business with those two companies.

Honeywell said it would continue in the computer business as a partner of Bull and NEC and would continue to focus on its core businesses of automation and con-trol for buildings, industry and the acrospace and military industries. Honeywell offered no details about its plans, but said the re-structuring would "create an entity with the size, technological base and international market position to be a more effective competitor in the worldwide computer industry."

Honeywell's Information Systems division, which sells mainframe computers, supercomputers and other products, made up 30 percent of the company's $6.6 bilion in revenue last year and about 35 percent of its operating profit of

The restructuring, Honeywell aid, will assure its "computer customers of a competitive and compatible product line, greater stability and more services."

Last week, Honeywell said it would eliminate about 4,000 jobs, or 4 percent of its worldwide work force, by the end of the year because of increased competition and a slow economy. It also said it was considering" a bid for Sperry Corp.'s aerospace business.

Honeywell owns 9 percent of Bull, which sells Honeywell and Bull systems in 75 countries. NEC supplies processors to Honeywell and distributes its computers in Ja-

Big Stores Find Small Is Profitable

U.S. Retailers Rebuild Along Specialty Lines

By Isadore Barmash New York Times Service
NEW YORK — "Making a statement" is the latest in retail-ing, often used to describe a deat" is the latest in retail-

In the retailing business itself, however, it is the specialty stores

The Limited, Renetton, Banama Republic, Crazy Eddie that have made the most noticeable statements in recent years, while the giant department stores have generally plodded along.

Now the biggest U.S. retailers are trying to change all that.

From their multistory headquarters, relics of a more gracious and less hectic era, the department stores are restructuring opera-tions, paring down their organi-zations, weeding out some prod-uct lines, spotlighting others — in other words, entering the leaner, more responsive world of specialty retailing.
A number have even spun off specialty-store chains - many, but not all of them, in the apparel field. Among the companies that are redesigning their busi-nesses are such behemoths as Scars, Roebuck & Co., Montgomery Ward and Woolworth's, as well as many of the more ups-Dayton-Hudson Corp., the

Two years ago, Bioomingdale's parent, Federated Department Stores, entered the lower-priced specialty store field with "MainStreet," a chain with 11 stores in the Chicago area and 7 scheduled to open this year in Detroit.

Change was all but inevitable, given the department stores' current state of siege. On one flank are the discount stores, which cannot rival the large retailers for service, but can underent their prices on such commodities as toys, sporting goods and large household appliances. On the other flank are the specialty stores, which cannot compete in range of products but can offer a higher level of service, greater depth in a limited range of merchandise and quicker responsive-All those features are attrac-

Fed Chairman Suggests Dollar Is at Right Level

WASHINGTON - The chairman of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board, Paul A. Volcker, said Wednesday that he felt that the dollar had declined enough and that other policy changes were needed to take care of America's trade problems.

"In contrast to the situation 18 months ago, and assuming growing markets are open to us, my sense is that we are, for now, reasonably close to an appropriate adjustment in that area," Mr. Volcker said in prepared testimony to Congress.

The Fed chairman's comments gave the dollar an early shot in the arm Wednesday, pushing it briefly above opening lows on currency markets, but it then settled back in later trading.

The dollar closed in London at 2.0475 Deutsche marks, down from 2.0510 there on Tuesday.

Mr. Volcker's testimony put him in apparent disagreement with Reagan administration views. Just last week, Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d threatened to push the value of the dollar lower unless the United States' trading partners did not do more to stimu late their own economies.

Mr. Baker's comments sparked a two-day slide in the dollar on foreign exchange markets.

But Mr. Volcker, testifying before a House Ways and Means trade subcommittee, said he be-lieved the dollar had fallen far enough over the last 18 months and that further declines could threaten to renew U.S. inflation.

The U.S. currency has dropped about 30 percent from its highs against the West German Deutsche mark and the Japanese yen early

Kaufman Expects Fall in U.S. Rates

NEW YORK — Henry Kaufman, chief economist of Salomon Brothers Inc., said Wednesday that the decline in long-term interest rates will continue, including further reductions in the Federal Reserve

Board's discount rate.

Mr. Kaufman, who met with reporters before an address to the Conference Board's annual Business Outlook Conference in New York, said he expected one and perhaps two more re-ductions in the Fed's discount rate by mid-1987. He was reluctant to brand his economic outlook "optimistic" but said that his forecast did not include a recession of a near-term outbreak of inflation. "A sectoral analysis of the economy suggests the continua-tion of subnormal economic growth," Mr. Kaufman said in his prepared text.

said. "At this point, I am not sure any further adjustment in the dollar is necessary. I would put the emphasis on other policies."

He added: "Indeed, without the support of other policies, exchange-rate changes can be counterproductive in important respects inflationary in the United States, and a restraint on demand and economic activity abroad."

To correct its yawning trade deficits, the Fed chairman said, the United States must begin to de-press domestic demand, through possible changes in fiscal policy See VOLCKER, Page 17

TOKYO — Mexico hopes to complete negotiations with international banks on a major new loan and repayments on existing foreign debts by Monday, its finance minister, Gustavo Petricioli, said Wednesday.

Mr. Petricioli said that Kei Tanaka, president of the Export-Im-port Bank of Japan, had agreed in principle to extend a $1-billion loan for three projects in Mexico: a $500-million pipeline linking the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean, a $240-million export development project and a $260-million expansion of the Sicartsa iron and steel works.

ICO to Resume Coffee Talks When Price Falls to $1.45

LONDON - Producer and consumer members of the International Coffee Organization have agreed to resume formal talks on future shares held by producers in the world coffee market when the ICO average indicator price falls to $1.45 a pound, a spokesman said Wednesday.

Jorio Dauster of Brazil, the producer spokesman, made the announcement at the ICO annual conference here.

The ICO average indicator price, reflecting the world coffee market, is now at $1.815. The producers and consumers represent the bulk of the $15-billion annual world coffee trade. ICO export quotas were suspended seven months ago after prices rose to their highest since 1977 on fears of a world supply shortage after drought damage to the crop in Brazil, the world's largest

The delegates said Tuesday that talks on producer future shares had been abandoned until an unspecified date. Under the existing system of quota distribution, Brazil accounts for about 30 percent of the ICO export market, a share consumers find unduly large in view of the country's production difficulties. For that reason, the consumers rejected a proposal by the producers for an extension of the current system into the coming coffee season.

JAKARTA — Foreign investment in Indonesia is likely to fall again this year despite a brief surge in project approvals after the government announced a new incentive package early this year, the chairman of the Investment Coordinating Board said Wednesday.

"I'm not too entimistic that overall foreign Sakes figures are unofficial. Yearly highe and lows reflect e previous 22 weeks plus the current week, but not the latest ading day. Where a self or stock dividend annualitie to 25 second or mare has been sald, the year's high-low range and vidend are shown for the new stock only. Unless attherwise "Tm not too optimistic that overall foreign investment approvals in 1986 will exceed last year's level of $859 million," Ginanjar Kartassasmita told parliament.

He said, however, that approvals of foreign investment projects rose to $615.3 million in the first eight months from $523.3 million a year earlier. Foreign companies operating here must carlier. Foreign companies operating here must do so through joint ventures.

Investment rose significantly after May, when the government announced new financial and tax incentives and doubled the number of business areas open to foreigners.

If foreign investment does drop in 1986, it would be the third consecutive decline since a record $2.9 billion in such investment in 1983.

IRVING, Texas --- Chrysler Motors Corp. is planning to export U.S.-made cars and mini-vans to Europe in 1987 to take advantage of the decline in the dollar's value, according to company officials.

"The whole mood has changed" egarding exports as a result of the akening of the dollar against the yest and major European curren-cies, Robert A. Lutz, Chrysler's re-cently appointed executive vice president for international opera-tions, said Tuesday,

"At 240 yea to the dollar we were doomed," Mr. Lutz said at a session called for the introduction of the company's new cars. "Now, at 150 yea we think we have a shot at matching the Japanese on costs and exporting some vehicles." Mr. Lutz, who was chairman of Ford Motor Co. in Europe from 1982 until this year, said a recent tour of Chrysler's distributors in Europe indicated they were most interested in selling the company's successful mini-varus and some new sporty models.

If Chrysler were to start a successful export program, it would be the first time in decades that American-made cars were sold in any quantity in Europe. Both General Motors Corp. and Ford have extensive manufacturing operations in Enrope, which Chrysler does not, and have shown little inclination to export from the United States.

The target countries are relatively wealthy: Switzerland, West Germany, the Netherlands and Belgium, Mr. Lutz said. In addition to the mini-vans, Chrysler is considering its new Chrysler LeBaron coupe and convertible models and high-performance versions of its smaller Dodge Shadow and Plym- mon outh Sundance cars. *VOLCKER: Suggests Dollar Has Fallen Far Enough

(Continued from first finance page) such as reducing the huge budget deficit, while pushing for higher sales of American goods overseas. "What we are going to have to do is consume less and export more,"

Mr. Voicker said Americans have been living in a "false paradise" in recent years as the country lived beyond its means and depended on large foreign borrowing to support its standard of living But he said this imbalance would have to end some time as the country faced up to painful adjustments needed to reduce its trade deficit. "We have been lucky to get by for five years, but we aren't going to get by much longer," he said. Mr. Volcker said he was not surprised that the U.S. trade balance had yet to improve, despite the dollar's sharp drop.

"We are still experiencing some of the lagged effects of the extraordinary strength of the dollar earlier," he remarked.

Mr. Volcker's apparent disagreement with the U.S. Treasury secreLondon Dollar Rates

The finance ministers and centrai bank leaders of the Group of Five countries are scheduled to meet Friday and Saturday in ngton before the op session of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund.

Many analysts expect some com-promise on the issue of international exchange-rate stability to emerge from the meeting.

Dealers agreed that the U.S. currency was likely to trade in a narrow band between 2.0275 DM and 2.0550 DM for the remainder of the week. It traded as high as 2.0520 after Mr. Volcker's remarks.

In London, the dollar closed at 154.61 yen, virtually unchanged from Tuesday; at 6.7077 French francs, down slightly from 6.7126, and at 1.659! Swiss francs, also

In earlier trading, the dollar was fixed at midday in Frankfurt at 2.0430 DM, down slightly from 2.0461 at the Tuesday fixing, and at 6.6350 French francs in Paris, down from 6.7000. It closed in Zurich at 1.6568 Swiss francs, down from 1.6598 there on Tuesday.

SEC Ponders Ways to Curb Stock Volatility

RETAILERS: Big U.S. Stores Turn to Specialization News of a record 21,49-09High quickly and decisively than the department store owners," said Walter K. Levy, a New York retail marketing consultant. "Consumers are reacting positively to those stores that have filled their particular niche of demand, whether it's product, age or Specialization does not guarantee success, of course. Woolworth's, after losing $9 million in 1984 on its J. Brannam off-price apparel chain, closed the stores last year. U.S. Shoe Corp., which operaies a number of apparel specialty chains including Casual Corner, Ups 'N Downs, T.H. Mandy and J. Riggings, overexpanded and had to shut down 67 units as well as its entire Proving Ground men's wear

The arguments in favor of at east some specialization are compelling. Retailing experts note that specialty stores tend to operate more efficiently than department stores, with fewer levels of management; while department stores have large consumer credit departments, for example, specialty stores can offer credit without policing it, because of widespread bank credit

Because specialty stores concen-trate on a few merchandise areas that they can move quickly, they have a higher rate of turnover, a critical measure of retailing success. The advent of the suburban mail and the strip center, with their multiple stores, has helped bring in traffic stores, burdened with unproductheir urban stores and are beginhead and increasing profits.

It is difficult to make strict financial companisons between department and specialty stores, which tend to be younger and, thus, to show more impressive growth rates. Even so, the numbers are instructive. Over a five-year period through 1985, sales of publicly owned apparel specialty chains rose an average of 21.3 percent annually, compared with publicly owned department stores' 9.1 percent, according to Alex. Brown & Sons, a Baltimore brokerage. Net income of the specialty stores rose at an average annual rate of 18.4 percent, against 17.3 percent for the bigger stores. From 1984 to 1985, specialty stores' profits were 4 percent of sales; department stores were 3 percent. In the same year, returns on assets and net worth were significantly higher for the specialty businesses.

Over the years - and increasingly, of late - many large retailers have stripped themselves of lowerproducing departments or those most prone to price-cutting competition. These include toys (except during the Christmas season). sporting goods, major appliances, harmaceuticals, tailored men's clothing, hats and food, except for candy and cookies.

But many of the department stores changed too little, or too late. Most of Gimbels's 36 department stores have closed, with the holdouts running going-out-of-business sales before being taken over by other companies and real estate de-By contrast, many of the big velopers. become the key. J.C. Penney has in effect become an apparel specialty business after dropping its major household durables and automobile service business. K mart Corp. is concentrating on fewer departments in exisiting stores and has also acquired or started several specialty chains. While Sears, the largest U.S. retailer, is known primarily for its 799 general merchandise stores and 2.361 catalogue sales offices and agents, it also operates 250 special-ty stores, which include separate chains selling business systems, paint and hardware and surplus merchandise. Each of the chains is being increased in number because said Edward Brennan, the company's chief executive officer, "specialty stores continue to be an attractive opportunity for growth." Sears deepened its commitment to specializing two years ago when it began its "store of the future," with 285 stores converted from traditional Sears outlets. The stores spotlight certain high-turnover departments, such as apparel, home furnishings, electronics and sport-

New-Issue Activity Surges As Sterling Bonds Plunge

By Christopher Pizzey

LONDON - The primary market had a surge in activity Wednesay after a very slow Tuesday. In the secondary sectors, dollarday after a very slow Tues denominated issues awaited further news on the interest-rate front, and the sterling-straight market plunged. News of a record £1.49-billion tailers as a means of slashing overAnd stretching behind them all is a trader said that after news of the er-dated sterling issues ended as much as 2 points lower.

Dollar-denominated debt totaling well over $1 billion was launched during the day, including the expected $500-million floatingrate-note issue for Red Nacional de Los Ferrocarriles Españoles and the $250-million straight for Belgium. Both issues were regarded by dealers as being tightly priced.

The $500-million floater for RENFE emerged as a 12-year issue paying the six-month London in-terbank bid rate with no margin and with a premium price of 100.10. It ended just within the total fees of 15 basis points at 99.98 bid. The lead manager was Salomon Brothers International.

EC and Comecon End 3-Day Geneva Meeting United Press Internation

GENEVA — Experts from the European Community and the Soviet-bloc trade organization, Comecon, concluded initial talks Wednesday on a communist proposal to establish official relations. An EC statement said the 3-day meeting had been "good and business like" but stressed that talks were still "exploratory."

"The discussion did not touch upon specific areas of cooperation between the EC and the CMEA," the statement said. Instead, it said, the talks centered on the question of estab-lishing official relations.

A trader at a firm not involved in the issue said: "Other people may disagree, but as far as we're concerned Spanish debt cannot command this sort of pricing."

Other dealers noted that al though Belgium went shead with its expected $250-million straight, its anticipated $150-million floater did not emerge.

Market sources said that Belgium had postponed the floating-rate note issue for the time-being but declined to elaborate. The straight issue pays 7½ per-cent over five years and was priced at 100%. It was lead-managed by Morgan Guaranty Ltd. and ended at a discount of 2.20, compared with the total fees of 1% percent. The City of Tokyo launched a $200-million bond issue paying 84 percent over 10 years and priced at 101½. It ended inside the total fees of 2 percent at a discount of 2, and was lead-managed by Banque Pari-bas Capital Markets.

in general, the new-issue market marches to the tune of trends in the stock prices for companies already in public hands. However, Mr. Franyo of Alex. And this market, as demonstrated by the Nasdaq composite index, has been noticeably weaker in recent months than other broad measures of stock prices. The difficulty faced by Smith in "H.G." Wells: Desperately Mortal" is the same faced by all would-be biographers of Wells. The life is much too long and full, the writing too copious to fit into the usual 200,000 words Nobody could do the whole Wells justice in fewer than a million. So hard choices must be made. Many of Smith's are wise ones. He has reduced the story of Wells's origins and early life, told inimitably by Wells in the autobiography, to a single chapter. He has devoted less attention than other biographers to some of the more familiar events in the author's life, such as his involvement in the internal politics of the that took its place. Wells was a journalist nearly all his life, with thousands of articles to his credit. He was also an educator, a writer of science fiction, a novelist, a popularizer of science and history, a sociologist, a utopist, an ideologist of world government and a founder of modern futurism. His writings did much to inspire the development of tanks, warplanes and the atomic bomb, as well as the League of Nations, the welfare state and the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Yet after his death in 1946 at age 79, public and scholarly interest in Wells dropped off sharply. Some of his books were still read, but for years few people cared much about the man who wrote them, or what he had been trying to do in the world. Since the 1960s, this has slowly do in the world. Since the 1960s, this has stowy changed. Five biographies have appeared, not counting David C. Smith's, together with 40-odd volumes of criticism and the reissue of many of Wells's books. His 1934 autobiography is back in print, supplemented by his hitherto unpublished account of his love life.

Literary critics have begun to consider the formal rehabilitation of Wells as a writer and even as a theorist of literature. Conferences on

Wells draw scholars from all over the world.

rels of his fellow scholars. What emerges is a warm, comfortable por-trait of H.G. Wells as friend, lover and public figure in his day-to-day life. We come to know virtually all the people, many of them eminent who were close to Wells. I found especially moving the account of his affair with Margaret Sanger, omitted in "H.G. Wells in Love." Her last tearful half-coherent love note, written just after she learned of Wells' death, is worth the price of Smith's book by itself.

Fabian Society. For the most part he shine literary criticism, analysis of intellectual forebears and commentary on the views and quar-

We also follow Wells on his numerous travels, such as the speaking tour of Australia in the blistering summer of 1938-39, given 13 pages alone. We are treated to detailed accountings of his finances, and his complex interactions with agents and publishers.

The real strength of the biography is Smith's formidable mastery of his hero's correspondence and unreprinted journalism. Wherever possible, he lets the words of a letter or a newspaper article tell the story, rather than $ relying on Wells' books. The result is a work that is fresh, new, and likely to enlighten even Wells specialists.

The approach has its drawbacks. For example, in discussing a crucial volume of Wells later years, "The Open Conspiracy," Smith recites how many editions were marketed, samples the reactions of Wells' friends in comspondence, continues with luncheous given by the author to promote the schemes for world revolution expounded in the book and concindes with a summary of follow-up articles. Fascinating, to be sure, but the reader learns next to nothing about "The Open Conspiracy"

There are other problems. Smith's tendency to organize his material by topics more than by periods leads him to scamper back and forth through Wells' life, referring along the way to people not yet properly introduced or to books not yet discussed.

Still, "H.G. Wells: Desperately Mortal" is a major study of a major life. It is relatively free of errors (although how did the consistent misspelling of Walter Lippmann's name escape notice?), and, better than its competitors, it gives us a feeling for the discipline, drive and productive bustle of this extraordinary man.

W. Warren Wagar, professor of history at the State University of New York at Binghamton, has written widely on H.G. Wells. He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

NCAA Group Will Weigh Major Cutbacks

WASHINGTON — A 10-man ad hoc committee that includes the top administrators of some of college sports' major powers is expected to ask the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Presidents Commission next week to propose rules changes that would substan-

China Aiming for Success Beyond Asia

By Larry Siddons

SEOUL - A giant is on the prowl, leaving its footprint wherever it steps. It has conquered a continent, and now seeks to make its mark on the rest of the world. The giant is China, the world's most populous nation and in recent years the dominant country in Asian sports. Winning gold medals at a re-cord-setting rate in the current Asian Games here, Chinese athletes now are being timed to become more competitive outside their home region, according to Wei Jizhong, deputy secretary general of the Chinese delegation. In comparison with Asia, we are very strong," he said, "But compared to Europe and the United States, we have much work to do." The emergence of China from an isolated nation in sports as well as politics and culture in the last decade has been well documented. After rejoining the Olympics in 1980 at the Winter Games in Lake Placid, New York, the Chinese became medal winners in the 1984 Summer Games, taking 15 gold medals and 32 overall to finish sixth — the best showing by an Asian team at Los Angeles.

In the quadrennial Asian Games, Chinese athletes first ed in the seventh edition, in Teberan in 1974, making an impressive start with 94 medals, including 25 golds. In 1978, they won 50 golds and 152 medals in mgkok and four years ago in New Delhi they won the most golds (61) while tying Japan for the overall lead with 153 medals.

Through Wednesday's fifth day of the Asian Games, China was pulling away in total medals; its 32 golds more doubled the showing of second-place Japan. The early competition has been heavy in events in which the Chinest excel — gymnastics, swimming diving and weightlifting. But if they stay anywhere near their current pace they will shat-ter the gold-medal mark of 77 set far) and diver Tan Liangde. The 388-member team, third largest at the games behind South Korea and Japan, is deep in talent.

The main point is that the athletes train very, very hard," said Wei. "Success depends upon the degree of their training." Such training has made the China's world-class gymnast, Li Ning.

China brings some world-class stars to the games, including gymnast Li Ning (four golds so has some good outside shooters powering in some events. "China has some good outside shooters, but it's their physical strength and their size," said Charff Young the Kuwaiti basketball coach, after his team lost to the Chinese, 99-75, in the first round. They just wear people down. They are fairly quick, but they don't out-quick you," he said. "They get the second shot, they throw you off balance. They pressure you and pressure you inside." Qian Chenghai, the Chinese basketball coach, agreed with Young's analysis. You must be strong to play 40 minutes of bas-ketball," he said.

In building their prograt Wei said, the Chinese have borrowed techniques and coaching belp from around the world.

We have learned from the strong points of all countries." he said. "In swimming, we have gone to the GDR [East Germany] and asked for help. We think the result has been good." Chinese athletes won four of the first 14 swimming gold medals this year. Their first swimming golds came four years ago in New Delhi.

where they won three events. East German and Australian coaches have been consulted in rowing, and U.S. coaches have helped out in track and swimming, Wei said, adding that coaches from the Soviet Union have not been used to help China build its athletic programs. Chinese athletes will return to Scoul in two years for the Olympics, and Wei said they should continue to do well then in diving and gymnastics, and should im-prove in feacing and shooting.

Another Yankee Reject Sets Pitching Mark

HOUSTON - Put Jim Deshaies on the list of players the New York

Yankees let get away.

Deshaies, the left-hander the Yankees traded to Houston for Joe Niekro last September, set a modern major-league record Tuesday night by striking out the first eight batters he faced en route to a twohit 4-0 victory over Los Angeles that cut the Astros' magic number for clinching the National League Western Division to two.

Deshaies broke the record of seven set earlier this year by another former Yankee, Joe Cowley of the Chicago White Sox - who last week pitched the major leagues' first no-hitter in two years. Mickey Welch of New York set the all-time mark by striking out nine to start a game on Aug. 28, 1884.

Deshaies, a rookie, finished with 10 strikeouts (and one walk) in registering his first major-league shutout and complete game. The only hits he allowed were a leadoff singames — and a one-out single to Enos Cabell in the seventh.

"I wasn't aware of the record, to tell you the truth," Deshaies said. past St. Louis. The Sacred Word and Rumblings from Olympus

New York Times Service NEW YORK - One of the lesser known facts about the U.S. Olympic Committee is that it has the sole legal right to the word "Olym-pic," under the 1978 Amateur Sports Act, which strengthened a 1950 act of Congress. The USOC occasionally contacts modest souviaki dens and other businesses, as well as any competitions that use the word "Olympic," to tell them to change their names quicker than Carl Lewis depositing a five-figure appearance fee in his amateur trust fund. "Our primary concern is people using the Olympic rings for commercial reasons, for items like apparel," said Richard G. Kline, the attorney for the committee. It is understandable that the committee would be concerned about other competitions using the word "Olympic." Imagine thinking you were buying box seats to an Olympic basketball game, and seeing a bunch of 11-year-old campers in oversized gym shorts in the Camp Pocahantas Olympics. Where's Bobby Knight? Since the committee cannot possibly investiwe decided to hire a private investigator named Diogenes, who disguised himself as a consumer carrying a lamp. If we could find anybody fooling the public, we were going to turn him in.

The first stop was the Olympic Diner out on Long Island, where he said to Gus the counter-Jim Deshaies

... Working against the Dodgers.

Man: "I want a large Greek salad. But first, tell me: Is this an Official Olympic Greek Salad, just like in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles?" "I don't understand you."

"Come on, you know how they did it in Los Angeles. They had the Official Olympic Syn-chronized Swimming Hair Gel, the Official Olympic Aspirin, the Official Olympic Athlete's Foot Powder." "This is a Greek salad, not an Olympic salad. Do you want it or not?"

Diogenes swung over to the Astoria section of Queens and felt like Inspector Maignet and Sherlock Holmes rolled into one as he spotted the Olympic Cleaning Co.

"I want my apartment cleaned every week," be told Tulla, the office manager. "But I don't want any riffraff. I want a couple of real Olympians to do the job." "All our employees are bonded," Tulla said.

"Who do you want?" "I want a Mr. Ueberroth and a Ms. Retton to do my apartment," Diogenes said, hoping to nab Tulla on false pretenses.

"We don't have anybody by that name." "Never mind, I'll do it myself." Diogenes said getting back in his car.

His next stop was New Jersey, where he terini, the agent, mapped out an itinerary for his imaginary trip to Greece: Olympic Airways, Olympic Bus Tour, Olympic Hotel, Olympic Restaurant, Olympic Bath and Tennis Club, Olympic Scaba, Olympic Motor Rikes....

Diogenes didn't think the committee was empowered to bust anybody in Greece, at least not yet, but perhaps he might catch Olympic Air-ways trying to horn in on the committee's turf.

"Can I use my mileage for Olympic tickets?" he asked in an innocent tone. "Sir, I don't know what you're talking about." Katerini said. "We have no connection with the Olympic Games."

Diogenes was getting frustrated trying to find somebody breaking the 1978 Amateur Snorts Act. He decided to go right to the source of all this Olympic chicanery and call Olympus itself, where Zens presided.

Greek gods being gregarious, Zeus even had

"Zens here."

"Look," Diogenes said, "I'm trying to help the U.S. Olympic Committee because they're quite upset with upstarts expropriating their name." "There's something called an Olympic Committee?" Zeus roared. "What do they do?"

They accept donations from fast-food chains to build sports facilities. They license official Olympic products. They hold sports events and sell tickets. They encourage athletes to hide their income in trust funds. They issue coins and medallions. They decide who can play and who They never asked my permission to call themselves an Olympic Committee," Zeus said, from deep in his throat. "They didn't have to," Diogenes said.

"They've got the Amateur Sports Act of 1978 behind them." "Is that so?" Zeus bellowed. "Hey, Ares, geon the extension and listen to this joker. And stick some of those thunderbolts in your belt."

Calling Bluff in South Africa

By Alan Cowell New York Times Service

OHANNESBURG - When she first thought of documenting the misery of fellow blacks through the pages of an autobiography. Ellen Kuzwayo said, she found that she was burdened by a legacy of her skin color.

'Black people have always been made to feel that there were certain things they could not aspire to achieving," she said recently. "I kept on feeling that I was not able to perform the task." But as with other things in a life of 72 years that has propelled her from rural beginnings to activities that range from social work to moviemaking Kuzwayo prevailed. Recently, her autobiography, "Call Me Woman," won South Africa's premier literary prize, the first black to receive it. Her tenacity is not altogether unusual in South Africa, where resolute women, both black and white, have challenged apartheid. Some, like Winnie Mandela, wife of the jailed black leader Nelson Mandela, or Albertina Sisulu, the wife of Mandela's cell mate. Walter Sisulu, and Kuzwayo herself have found them-with other restrictions. In her autobiography, Kuzwayo seems to focus more on ordinary people and the small tribulations of life among women, separated from their husbands by decades of legislation. Laws in the early 20th century, selves detained or confronted she writes, forced men to leave villages and sell their labor in the mines. "The whole burden of looking after the homestead, livestock, plowing and the family was shifted to the womenfolk in the villages. It has stayed that way to this day. Without warning, training or any sort of preparation," she says of rural black women, they "became overnight mother father, family administrator, counselor, child-minder, old-age caretaker and overall overseer of family and neighborhood affairs in a community which had been totally deprived of its active male

Her book represents an indicament of a system of rule that has permitted a minority to dominate a majority. Yet it also seems a immary of the very odds that Kuzwayo has overcome to defy that status that the system of white rule would confer on her.

Kuzwayo was educated at schools run by missionaries and later became a teacher, spending a peripatetic life among relatives. marrying only to divorce after two sons were born, and being drawn into the politics of black protest. In 1946 she became secretary of the Youth League of the African National Congress, then a lawful political movement but now the country's most prominent outlawed insurgent group. In 1953, she switched from teaching to social work, training in her new job alongside Mrs. Mandela, and her life seemed a patchwork of joys and sadnesses

— a second husband, who died, and a son expelled from college for political activism; her son's banishment to a remote area, and his marriage there; the dispossession of the family farm under legislation prohibiting blacks from living in officially white areas; and after the riots of 1976 in Soweto, a more prominent political role in Soweto's Committee of 10 activist group, and detention for five months without charge or

In a recent conversation, Kuzwayo's defiance seemed unmmed. What, she was asked, had changed in the two years since the white authorities first promised racial change with a new constitution? "The change is that — I'm going to put it very bluntly — I think the black people in South Africa have called the bluff, the myth of the South African government.

"For too long," she said, "we thought they meant what they said. For too long they have given with one hand and taken back with the other. And this has broken the trust, the confidence that the black had in the government of South Africa."

Kuzwayo was sponsored during the three years she spent writ-ing her book by Harry Oppenhei-you would go there, too."

Anglo American Corp., and its sister company, De Beers, which together form the nation's biggest ning conglomerate. In 1980, she earned a diploma in advanced social work, and that gave her the confidence to embark on her book, which was published last year. And, while she was writing, the University of the Witwatersrand here offered her an office so that, in a way, her life bridged privilege

But that does not seem a par ticular problem. When, in 1976, she was studying for her diploma — at age 62 — she came out of the university for bunch and saw a newspaper headline saying, "10.000 Students Riot in Soweto.

A white lecturer, she said sought to dissuade her from returning home. But, she recalls, she told the lecturer, "If it were the children of your community, ordered the Librarian of Congress to once again produce a Braille edition of Playboy magazine. U.S. District Judge Thomas F. Hogan ordered the Library to begin in January to publish 12 monthly editions of a Braille Playboy, which comes in four volumes and contains no pictures or advertisements. He also ordered the library to produce recorded or "talking book" editions of the 1986 issues, beginning with last January's. Libraries iel Boorstin ceased production of the Braille editions of Playboy last December, after Congress withheld $103,000 in library funds, the exact amount it costs to print 1,000 copies of the magazine for the blind. Hogan said Tuesday that Boorstin used a backdoor approach to a formalistic game that congressmen were playing to eliminate fu-ture editions of Playboy. "Censorship, whether by Congress or by the Librarian of Congress, is equally abborrent to a society built on the tenets of freedom of speech and expression," Hogan said.

Braille Playboy Ordered

With the pride of new homeowners, Jimmy and Rosslynn Carter showed off the Carter Presidential Center and its museum exhibits in Atlanta to reporters and communi-ty leaders. "This is my first tour, so you'll have to pardon my amateur-ish approach," Carter said Tuesday as he introduced a film on his presidency that will be shown at the beginning of each tour. The center will be dedicated in a ceremony attended by President Ronald Reagan Wednesday, Carter's 62d birthday. It will open to the public the next day.

Frank Shastra, in Europe to prove to Americans that they can travel to this continent safely, was whisked away by his bodyguards from dozens of reporters awaiting him at the Madrid airport Tuesday. "Get me out of here," Sinatra was heard saying, after sighting the crowd of photographers and television cameramen jockeying for position at Barajas Airport. Susma Reynolds, a Sinatra spokeswoman told United Press International that the singer had come to Europe "to show Americans they don't have to worry about traveling here."
